IN the following pages I have endeavoured to furnish the Oriental Student with a correct edition of the most celebrated drama of India's greatest dramatist. Strange to say, no edition of the text of the "Śakuntalā" has ever before been published in England. Yet no composition of Kālidāsa displays more the richness of his poetical genius, the exuberance of his imagination, the warmth and play of his fancy, his profound knowledge of the human heart, his delicate appreciation of its most refined and tender motions, his familiarity with the workings and counterworkings of its conflicting feelings,—in short, more entitles him to rank as "the Shakespeare of India." Nor, in comparing him with our own great Dramatist, should we fail to remark the command of language exhibited by the present play. In this respect the singular flexibility and copiousness of Sanskrit may have even given him the advantage. On the Continent, the "Śakuntalā" has been studied and admired, not only by oriental scholars who possess a correct edition of the text, but by the general public, who enjoy the advantage of good translations; insomuch that Goethe, Schlegel, and Humboldt have all expressed their admiration of this masterpiece of the Hindú Poet. Goethe's four beautiful lines, which appeared in 1792, are—

"Willst du die Blüthe des frühen, die Früchte des späteren Jahres, Willst du was reizt und entzückt, willst du was sättigt und nährt, Willst du den Himmel, die Erde, mit einem Namen begreifen:
Nenn' ich Sakuntalā, Dich, und so ist Alles gesagt."*

* Thus translated for me by Professor Eastwick —

"Wouldst thou the young year's blossoms and the fruits of its decline,
' And all by which the soul is charmed, enraptured, feasted, fed, Wouldst thou the earth and heaven itself in one sole name combine?
I name thee, O Sakuntala! and all at once is said."

Augustus William von Schlegel, in his first Lecture on Dramatic Literature

In England, on the contrary, we have depended for our knowledge of the “Śakuntalā” solely on Sir William Jones’ translation, which does not truly represent the original. The other great dramatic work of the same Poet, the “Urvaśī” or “Vikramorvaśī,” is indeed known to the public by the admirable translation of Professor H. H. Wilson ; but, with the exception of my own edition of this play, published at Hertford, and intended merely to meet the wants of the lecture-room until I should have leisure to perfect it on the same plan as the present volume, no edition of the text of either play has ever been printed in this country. Nor have other Sanskrit dramas, in spite of the interest excited by Professor Wilson’s translations, received more attention at the hands of English editors of Oriental works. Only one other play, the “Vira-charitra,” edited by Dr. Trithen, can be reckoned among the many important publications that have issued from the presses of our Oriental printers. Possibly our backwardness in editing the text of these compositions, may be attributed to our accidental preference for other productions in a language, which has surprized the world by the variety of its literary treasures, and by the new direction it has given to philological study ; or, perhaps, to our acquiescence in the Calcutta

(translated by Black), says :—“Among the Indians, the people from whom perhaps all the cultivation of the human race has been derived, plays were known long before they could have experienced any foreign influence. It has lately been made known to Europe, that they have a rich dramatic literature, which ascends back for more than two thousand years. The only specimen of their plays (natak) hitherto known to us is the delightful Sakuntala, which, notwithstanding the colouring of a foreign climate, bears in its general structure such a striking resemblance to our romantic drama, that we might be inclined to suspect we owe this resemblance to the predilection for Shakspeare entertained by Jones, the English translator, if his fidelity were not confirmed by other learned orientalists. In the golden times of India, the representation of this natak served to delight the splendid imperial court of Delhi.”

Alexander von Humboldt, in treating of Indian poetry (Kosmos, translated by Prichard, vol. ii., p. 38), observes : “The name of Kalidasa has been frequently and early celebrated among the western nations. This great poet flourished at the splendid court of Vikramaditya, and was, therefore, cotemporary with Virgil and Horace. The English and German translations of the Sakuntala have excited the feeling of admiration which has been so amply bestowed upon Kalidasa. Tenderness in the expression of feelings, and richness of creative fancy, have assigned to him his lofty place amongst the poets of all nations.” In a note (p. 114), he says : “Kalidasa, the celebrated Author of the Sakuntala, is a masterly describer of the influence which Nature exercises upon the minds of lovers. The scene in the forest, which he introduced in the drama of Vikrama and Urvasi, is one of the most beautiful and poetical productions which have appeared in any time.”

editions (now out of print), published under the authority of the Committee of Public Instruction, and printed at the Education press.

So far as I can collect, the actual extent of our knowledge of the Hindú Theatre—whether acquired through English translations, or the printed editions of foreign countries—may be thus stated. Seventy years have elapsed since Sir W. Jones discovered that there existed in India a number of Nāṭakas, or Sanskrit dramas, many of them of great antiquity; some abounding in poetry of such undoubted merit, and in pictures of Hindú life and manners so charming and faithful, as to render them prizes of the greatest value to all classes of literary men. Eager to apply the means thus gained of filling what was before an empty niche in the Temple of Sanskrit Literature, Sir W. Jones addressed himself at once to translate into English the “Śakuntalā,” which he was told was the most popular among the natives. Unfortunately the Paṇḍits omitted to inform him that the multiplication of manuscripts of this play, consequent upon its popularity, had led to a curious and perplexing result,—not, however, unexampled, as has since been proved by the two-fold version of the “Rāmāyaṇa,”—namely, that the various manuscripts separated themselves into two groups or classes: the one class embracing all those in Devanāgarī writing, which, without perfect uniformity, had still a community of character; the other, all those in Bengālī.

German scholars distinguish these two classes of manuscripts by the names “Devanāgarī recension” and “Bengālī recension,” which terms may conveniently be adopted. The Devanāgarī recension is the older and purer: the Bengālī, however, must have existed at least 400 years, since it is followed by the “Sāhitya-darpana,” one MS. of which bears the date 1504 of our era. The MSS. of the Devanāgarī class are chiefly found in the Upper Provinces of India, where the great demand has produced copyists without scholarship, who have faithfully transcribed what they did not understand, and, therefore, would not designedly alter. On the other hand, the copyists in Bengal have been Paṇḍits, whose cacothēs for emending, amplifying, and interpolating, has led to the most mischievous results. The bold and nervous phrasology of Kālidāsa has been either emasculated or weakened, his delicate expressions of refined love clothed in a meretricious dress, and his ideas, grand in their simplicity, diluted by repetition or amplification. Many examples might be here adduced; but I will only refer the student to the third Act of the Bengálí recension, where the love-scene between the King and Śakuntalá has been expanded to five times the length it occupies in the MSS. of the Devanágari recension, and the additions are just what an indelicate imagination might be expected to supply. Even the names of the dramatis-personæ have been tampered with: the King Dushyanta is changed into Dushmanta; Anasúyá into Anusúyá; Vátáyana into Párvatáyana; Sānumatí into Mísrakśí; Taraliká into Pingaliká; Dhanamitra into Dhanavridhí; Márkaṇḍeya into Sankochana.

Unfortunately, it was a MS. of this recension, and not a very good specimen of its class, that Sir W. Jones used for his translation. From him, therefore, was gained about sixty-five years since, the first incorrect knowledge of this, the first Sanskrit play known to Europeans. No edition of the text appeared till about forty years afterwards, when one was produced, after immense labour, at Paris, in the year 1830, by M. Chézy. He deserves great credit for the difficulties he surmounted; but his edition was also from a MS. of the Bengálí recension, and has no more value than Sir W. Jones' translation. It abounds also in typographical and other more serious errors. An edition of the "Śakuntalá" was subsequently printed in Calcutta, also from Bengálí MSS., and in the Bengálí character, by Prema-chandra, dated Śáka 1761, or A.D. 1839.

It was reserved for Dr. Otto Bochtlingk to be the first to edit the Devanágari recension of this play at Bonn in the year 1842. No other edition of the text of this recension has been published until the present time; and in England even the Bengálí text has never yet appeared.

The translations of this play which have been published since that of Sir W. Jones and the German version of his translation by Forster, in 1791, are,—first, the French of M. Chézy; subsequently, the German of Hirzel, Rückert, and Bochtlingk; a Danish translation by Hammerich; and, very recently, another German translation in prose and verse, by Meier: not to speak of Danish and Italian versions of Sir W. Jones' English.

I propose myself very shortly to offer to the public a free

English translation, in prose and verse, of the Devanāgarī recension of this drama.

Of the "Vikramorvaśi," the twin play of the "Śakuntalā," two editions have appeared on the Continent; one at Bonn, by Lenz, and a more perfect one at St. Petersburg, by Bollensen: an edition of this play was also brought out in Calcutta, which is now out of print. Translations by Hoefler and Hirzel have been published in Germany. The "Mālavikāgnimitra," also attributed to Kālidāsa, has been edited at Bonn, by Tullberg, but the notes and translation which were promised, have not yet appeared. The "Mricchhakatika," supposed to be the oldest Sanskrit play extant, has been well edited in Germany by Stenzler, and in Calcutta. From the Education-press of Calcutta have also issued editions of the "Mālatī-mādhava," "Uttara-rāma-charitra," "Mudrā-rākshasa," and "Ratnāvali," all of which, as well as the "Vikramorvaśi," have been translated into English prose and verse by Professor Wilson. The poetical merit of these translations must always secure for them a high degree of favour; and the Essay prefixed to them affords copious and valuable information on the Dramatic System of the Hindūs. It should be mentioned that a literal English prose translation of the "Vikramorvaśi" by Mr. Cowell, has recently issued from the press of Mr. Austin, of Hertford. The allegorical philosophical drama "Prabodha-chandrodaya" has been edited both in Calcutta and in Germany, and the "Mahā-nāṭaka," or "Hanuman-nāṭaka," (a dramatic history of Rāma-chandra, attributed to the monkey chief Hanumān) in Calcutta. Part of the "Dhūrta-samāgama" will be found in Professor Lassen's "Sanskrit Anthology." Professor Wilson, in the appendix to his "Hindū Theatre," has given interesting abstracts of some unedited plays. Beyond this, as far as I can recollect, nothing very important has been effected either in England or abroad in relation to the Indian Drama.

I am bound to acknowledge that I have made free use of Dr. Bochtlingk's edition of the text of the "Śakuntalā" in preparing the following pages for the press. The merit of his work can hardly be overrated; but I may, without presumption, say that I have discovered many better readings, corrected some errors, and introduced much original matter in the shape of annotations. In point

In regard to the text of the present drama, if I have succeeded in producing a more correct edition of the Devanāgarī recension than that of Dr. Boehtlingk, the merit is due to the more ample materials at my command. I have taken care to avail myself of Dr. Boehtlingk's corrections of himself, and his after-thoughts at the end of his work, as well as of such critical remarks as coincided with my own views. Often working independently of him, I have arrived at similar results, because I have had access to all the materials whence his Apparatus Criticus was composed. More than this: Dr. Boehtlingk tells us that his edition was not prepared from original MSS., but that Professors Brockhaus and Westergaard having more or less carefully collated certain MSS. in the East-India House Library, and in the Bodleian at Oxford, and made only partial extracts from three native commentaries, handed over the results of their labours to him. All these MSS. and Commentaries have been placed at my disposal, and most of them left in my possession until the completion of my work. Not a passage has been printed without a careful collation of all of them, and the three Commentaries have been consulted from beginning to end.

The MSS. which I have principally used, are:—

1. A MS. from the Colebrooke collection, and, therefore, from the Eastern side of India, numbered 1718.

2. A MS. from the Mackenzie collection, and therefore from Southern India, numbered 2696.

3. A MS. from the Taylor collection, and therefore from Western India, numbered 1858, dated Śāka, 1734.

All these belong to the East-India House Library, and represent the three Indian Presidencies respectively.

4. A copy of a very good MS. at Bombay, presented to me by Mr. Shaw, of the Bombay Civil Service.

5. An old Bengālī MS. belonging to the Library of the East India House, numbered 1060.

6. A very old Bengālī MS. from Professor Wilson's collection in the Bodleian.

I have from time to time consulted other Bengālī MSS., but have rarely admitted readings from them, unless supported by some one of the Devanāgarī. Thus, the verses which I have inserted at the beginning of the third Act are supported throughout by my own and the Taylor MS., and partially by that of the Mackenzie collection.

The following are the three Indian Scholiasts :—

1. Kāṭavema, whose commentary, from the Mackenzie collection at the East-India House, is the only one in the Devanāgarī character. He was the son of Kāṭa Bhūpa, minister of Vasanta (who was himself the author of a dramatic work called “Vasanta-rājīya”), King of Kumāra-giri, a place on the frontiers of the Nizam’s dominions. He must have lived after the commencement of the sixteenth century, as he quotes Halaṃyudha, the author of the “Kavi-rāhasya” [see Westergaard’s preface to the “Radices Linguae Sanskritæ”]. This commentary is very corrupt; but where it is intelligible, is of great utility in throwing light on the more difficult passages of this play.

2. Śankara, whose commentary, from Professor Wilson’s collection in the Bodleian Library, is on the Bengālī recension, and written in the Bengālī character. In many places it agrees with the readings of the Devanāgarī recension, or at least notices them.

3. Chandra-śekhara, whose commentary, belonging to the East-India House, is also on the Bengālī recension, and seldom does much more than repeat the words of Śankara. If this Chandra-śekhara is the same person as the father of Viśva-nātha, the author of the “Sāhitya-darpaṇa,” he probably lived sometime in the fifteenth century.

I have never failed to consult the three commentaries before deciding on the reading of my text, and have made their interpretations the basis of the literal translation I have given of the metrical part of the play.

All that is known of Kālidāsa, the author of the “Śakuntalā,” may be stated in a few words. He lived in Ujjayinī or Oujein, the capital of King Vikramāditya, who flourished 56 years B.C., and whose reign is the starting-point of the Hindū Era called Samvat. He was one of the nine celebrated gems of that monarch’s court, the splendour of which is a favourite theme with Hindū writers in all languages. The other works attributed to him are the “Vikramorvaśī,” and “Mālavikāgnimitra,” before noticed; the “Megha-dūta,” or Cloud-messenger, a short but beautiful poem, which has been edited by Professor Johnson in England and by Mr. Gildemeister at Bonn, and translated into English verse by Professor Wilson; the “Raghu-vanśa,” a heroic poem, edited and translated into Latin by Stenzler; the “Ritu-sanhāra,” edited and translated by Bohlen, a short poem on the six Seasons, each verse of which is like a medallion, giving a complete picture of some Indian scene; the “Kumāra-sambhava,” a poem on the Birth of Skanda, the god of war, of which part has been lost; the rest, edited by Stenzler, and recently translated into English verse by Mr. Griffiths. The “Śringāra-tilaka,” “Praś-nottara-mālā, Hāsyārṇava,” and “Śruta-bodha,” are also ascribed to Kālidāsa. The “Nalodaya,” attributed to him, is certainly the production of a later epoch.

I have to express my acknowledgements to Professor Johnson, who has assisted me in revising the proof-sheets of this volume, and has aided me by occasional suggestions. I have also to thank Dr. Max Müller for some information connected with the Vedas.

Every credit is due to Mr. Austin, of Hertford, for the spirited manner in which he has undertaken the printing and publication of this and other Oriental works, and spared neither trouble nor expense in carrying them through the press.

So the Vishnu-Purāṇa as quoted by Śankara [p. 58, Wilson]—'Brahmā assigned to them their respective stations: water, the sun, earth, fire, air, æther, the officiating Brāhman [dīkṣhito brāhmaṇah], and the moon; these are termed their visible forms [tanavaḥ].' In the opening of Mālavikā, Śiva is said to uphold the universe by means of these forms, aṣṭābhir tanubhir bibhrataḥ kṛtsnam jagadapi. See also Kumāra-s., iv., 76. Śankara, with far-fetched subtilty, points out how each of these types of Śiva is intended by the poet to typify events and circumstances in the life of Śakuntalā. Thus, ya sṛṣṭiḥ, etc. is compared with the sentiment in verse 43; and ye dve, etc., is supposed to be significant of her two female friends.

¹ In the Hindú drama every piece commences with a prologue, which is preceded by the Nándí, invoking the favour of some deity. Bharata says, Sútradhárah pathen nándim madhyamam [prathamam: Ch.] swaram áśritah, 'the Sútradhára may recite the Nándí in a tone neither high nor low.' The stage-manager was generally a Bráhmaṇ, and therefore qualified to recite the Nándí in his own person. He did so, however, as a Bráhmaṇ, and not in his character of Sútradhára, or manager, which he did not assume till he had concluded the Nándí. Nándyante sútradhárah is therefore equivalent to nándim pathitvá sútradháro vadati. So Chandra-śekhara, Nándi, etadanto sútradháro vadati, nándim pathitvá anyad vadati ityarthah. Hence, the word praviśya, 'entering,' is not required; the reciter of the Nándí remaining on the stage in the character of manager. [Iti nayena nándyante sútradhára-praveśo 'pástaḥ: Ch.] If, however, the manager happened not to be a Bráhmaṇ, he seems to have had no right to the title Sútradhára, nor to have been qualified to recite the Nándí, but in that case some Bráhmaṇ pronounced the blessing, and the Sthápaka then entered as Sútradhára. Such, at least, seems to be the meaning of Bharata's aphorism [ranga-plájám vidháya ádau sútradháre vimirgate sthápakah praviśet páśchát sútradhára-guṇákṛitih] though all the extant plays make the Sútradhára first recite the benediction, and then carry on the dialogue. The Sáh.-darp., p. 137, has the following: Idánim púrva-rangasya samyak-prayogábhávád eka eva sútradhárah sarvam proyodayati iti vyavahárah sa sthápakah. The blessing is usually followed by some mention of the author of the piece, an appeal to the favour of the audience, and a short dialogue between the manager and one of the actors [páripárświka]. In the present play, the actress sings a song for the amusement of the audience; and in every case, the conclusion of the prelude prepares them for the entrance of one of the dramatis-personæ. Hence, the manager exclaims, 'I was forcibly carried away by the ravishing melody of thy song, like king Dushyanta here by the very fleet antelope.'

sekkhara quotes a verso of Bharata, Vaded rājñim cha chetim cha bhavatīti

³ 'Casting (my) eye on the black-antelope and on thee with-thy-strung-bow
I behold, as is were, Śiva visibly present chasing the deer.' Adhi-jya, 'having the string [jya] up;' at the end of the chase the bow would be sithila-jya: see verse 40. Sa-jya is used like adhi-jya. Pinākin is Śiva, armed with his bow or trident called Pinaka. [So the bow of Vishnu has a name Sārnga, and that of Arjuna, Gāndhīva: Megh., 48, 50.] In illustration, Kāṭavema refers to Raghu-v., xi., 44, Dhanuh, yena vṛisha-dwajo rānam as-jad vidruta-kratu-mṛigānusārīnam. Śiva, not being invited to Dakṣha's celebrated horse-sacrifice, was so indignant, that with his wife he suddenly presented himself, confounded the sacrifice, dispersed and mutilated the gods, and chasing Yajna, 'the lord of sacrifice,' who fled in the form of a fleet deer, overlook and decapitated him. The Vāyu-Purāna makes Śiva create a manifestation of himself as a monstrous being named Vīra-bhadra, who pursues Yajna in the form of a deer: see Vishnu-Purāna, p. 65.

² '[With surprize.] How now! the deer has become visible with difficulty [lit., with effort] to me pursuing (him).'

⁴ 'Separated by a longer interval' or 'distance.'

⁵ The expressions nirūpya and ntāyitwā, which occur so frequently in the stage-directions, are undoubtedly synonymous. They may both be translated by 'acting,' 'gesticulating,' 'exhibiting by gesticulation.' The properties and paraphernalia of the Hindú stage were as limited as the scenery; and though seats, thrones, weapons, and cars were certainly introduced, yet much had to be supplied by the imaginations of the spectators, assisted by the gesticulations of the actors. Thus, though the car of Dushyanta might have been represented on the stage, the horses would be left to the imagination, and the speed of the chariot would only be indicated by the gesticulations of the charioteer. In a subsequent part of this Act, Śakuntalā is pursued by a bee, which, by her gestures, she tries to beat off; but we are not to suppose that an artificial bee, suspended by an invisible wire, was brought upon the stage, as might be attempted in a modern theatre.

¹ 'The reins being loosed, these chariot-horses run along as if with impatience of the speed of the deer [i.e., impatient or emulous of its speed], having the fore-part of their bodies well stretched out, having the chowrie which forms their crests motionless, having the upper [part of their] ears depressed [or bent backwards], not to be overtaken even by the dust raised by themselves.'—The chāmari or chowrie was formed of the white bushy tail of the Yak or Bos grunniens, and was used for whisking off flies; also as an emblem of princely rank. It was placed as an ornament between the ears of horses, like the plume of the war-horse of chivalry. The velocity of the chariot caused it to lose its play and appear fixed in one direction, like a flag borne rapidly against the wind. A similar idea occurs in the commencement of the Vikramorvaśī, chitrāmbha-vinīśchalam haya-sirasi chāmaram. There is some difficulty in nibhritorādhwa-karṇāḥ. The commentators explain nibhrita by nīśchala, 'motionless.' This meaning is not supported by the dictionary, nor by any passage with which I am acquainted. The most usual sense of nibhrita is 'secret,' 'modest,' 'humble,' 'low' [Gīt. Gov. ii., 11; ii., 21. Hitop. passim.] Hence may easily flow the acceptation 'depressed,' 'bent down.' The ears of a horse while running at full speed are not exactly erect, but rather bent backwards so as to present the least resistance to the wind. This interpretation is confirmed by the reading of the Bengálí MSS., chyuta-karṇa-bhanga, 'having the flaccid part of the ear lowered;' but if the sense nīśchala be insisted on, translate—'having the cars immovably erect.'

that which was divided in half becomes as if united; that also which is by nature [really] crooked (appears) even-lined [straight] to my eyes. Nothing (seems) at a distance from me nor at my side even for a moment, by reason of the velocity of the chariot.' This is a method of describing great velocity of motion, which may be well appreciated by any one, in these days, who may have taken notice of the effect produced upon adjacent objects by an express railway speed of a mile a minute. A building which as seen in the distance has several divisions, seems to combine into one solid whole when we are suddenly brought to look at it from another point of view, its separate parts being hidden behind each other. Again, an object which has in reality a crooked or irregular outline when close to one's side, will assume more evenness and regularity of shape when we have left it at a distance.

lone something: thus, πέμπτος αὐτὸς, 'himself with four others.' [Thucydides, I. xlv.] The τρίτον ἡμιτάλαντον 'two talents and a half,' and ἑξέδομον ἡμιτάλαντον 'six talents and a half' of Herodotus [I. 15, 50] afford a further illustration of this idiom.

¹ 'Not indeed, not indeed must this arrow (of thine) be allowed to descend upon this tender body of the deer, like fire upon a heap of fawns. Where, forsooth, on the one hand [cha], is the very frail existence of fawns? and where, on the other, are thy sharp-falling adamantine shafts?' i.e., Where is the suitability or congruity between the one and the other? What has one got to do with the other? How great a contrast or difference is there between the one and the other! Let not your shafts waste their strength upon an object so frail and tender, but let them be directed towards a mark more fitted to prove their adamantine qualities. This repetition of kwa to express great contrast or unsuitability between two things is very remarkable. It is used by Kālidāsa again at the end of the second Act of this play, kwa vayan, etc.; also in the fifth verse of the Megha-dūta, thus,—'Where is a cloud which is a collection of vapour, fire, water, and wind? and where the meaning of messages to be received by intelligent mortals?' i.e., Why deliver a message intended for intelligent human beings to a cloud? What possible connection can there be between objects whose nature is so different?—A very good example of this use of kwa also occurs in the second line of the Raghu-vanśa, 'Where is the race sprung from the sun? and where my scanty powers of mind? (In attempting the history of this race) I am foolishly about to cross the trackless ocean in a small boat.' This idiom is imitated in Telugu [see Morris' Selections, Story 39]: 'Where is the lake Mānasa? and where art thou?' i.e., What hast thou to do with the lake Mānasa? What connection can there possibly be between you?—The majority of MSS. read pushpa-rāsau: I cannot agree in preferring tūla-rāsau, for the very reason that cotton is more susceptible of fire than flowers, and there would be less of incongruity in throwing fire upon the former than upon the latter.

<sup>1</sup> 'Therefore replace (in the quiver) your well-aimed [lit., well fitted to the bow], arrow. Your weapon is for the deliverance of the distressed, not to inflict a wound on the innocent.' Sandhā is properly 'to unite or fix an arrow to a bow,' hence 'to take aim' [Draup. har., 149]; and sandhānam, 'the act of taking aim.' Prahartum is here used where praharaṇaya might be expected, but the infinitive is interchangeable with the dative, and generally has the force of that case.

<sup>2</sup> 'This is worthy of your honour, who art the light of the race of Puru,' i.e., an illustrious descendant of Puru. Compare in the beginning of the Vikramorvaśī, sadrīṣam idam soma-vansa-sambhavaśya. In English we have the same idiom, 'this is just like [i.e., worthy of] one born in the Lunar race.' The two great lines or dynasties of kings according to Hindī mythology were the Solar and the Lunar. The Solar begins with Ikṣvāku the son of Vaivasvata, the son of Vivasvat, or the Sun, and is carried on through Kakutstha, Dilīpa, Raghu, Aja, and Daśaratha, to his son the great Rāma-chandra, hero of the Rāmāyana. Under the Lunar come Puru and Dushyanta, and some of the most celebrated heroes and demi-gods, as—1. Soma; 2. his son, Budha; 3. his son, Purūravas; 4. his son, Āyus; 5. his son, Nahusha; 6. his son, Yayāti; 7. his sons, Puru and Yadu. From Puru were descended Tansu, Anila, Dushyanta and Bharata. From his brother Yadu came Satwata, Śura, Vasudeva, and his sons Balarāma and Kṛishṇa. From Bharata the son of Dushyanta and descendant of Puru, came after a time Ajamīdha, Samvarana, Kuru, Sántanu, Bhīshma, and Kṛishnadwaipāyana or Vyāsa. The latter was the father of Dhṛitaāshtra and Pāṇḍu. The quarrels of the hundred sons of Dhṛitarāshtra with their cousins the five sons of Pāṇḍu (all of them being thus descended from Kuru and Puru) form the subject of the Mahābhārata, the great poem said to have been written by the father of Pāṇḍu and recited to his great-great-grandson Janamejaya. These two separate lines were, however, occasionally intermixed by marriage, and a cross occurs at the very beginning, by the marriage of Ilā, daughter of Vaivaswata, with Budha. Paraśu-rāma, as a Brāhman, belonged to neither dynasty, but was connected with the Solar on his mother's side : he is said to have destroyed the whole Kshatriya race (see the note to verse 22).

According to the Vishṇu-saṁhitā, a chakravartī is one in whose hand the chakra, or discus of Vishṇu, delineated. There have been twelve of these emperors, commencing with Bharata, the son of Dushyanta.

<sup>2</sup> This is the usual exclamation which serves to ratify any auspicious saying or prophecy uttered by a Brāhman. Brāhmaṇa-vachas may be applied; 'the word of a Brāhman is accepted.' See the same phrase in the Vikramorvaśī, Act 2.

A parallel passage occurs in Raghu-vansa, xviii., 47, 'the earth was preserved by his arm, though without the mark of the scar formed by the bow-string' (abaddha-maurri-kīṇa-lāñchhanena). The ancient Hindús extracted from the leaves of the Múrvá plant (Aletris) very tough, elastic threads, with which they made their bow-strings [maurri], and which for that reason, were ordained by Manu to form the girdle or zone of the military or Kshatriya class. Manu, II., 42.

<sup>२</sup> Soma-tirtha is a place of pilgrimage in the West of India, on the coast of Guzerat, near the temple of Somanáth. It is also called Prabhása. The fable is that Soma, or the Moon, was here cured of the consumption brought upon him by the imprecation of Daksha, his father-in-law [Mahábhárata, vol. iii., p. 249; Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 561.] A tirtha is a place of pilgrimage, generally fixed on the bank of some sacred stream, especially the Ganges; or in the vicinity of some holy spring. The word is derived from trī, 'to cross,' or 'pass over,' implying that the stream has to be passed through, either for the washing away of sin, or for extrication from some difficulty or adverse destiny. Thousands of devotees still flock to the most celebrated tirthas, Benares, Haridwár, etc.

<sup>1</sup> The sense of ābhoga which is required here, has not been fixed in the dictionary. The commentators explain it by visṭāra, 'extension,' 'breadth,' 'amplitude.' One of them [Kāṭavema] gives an additional synonym, paripūrnatā, 'fulness,' 'completion,' 'satiety.' Śāṅkara, in explaining the word parindha in the sense of 'circumference,' gives ābhoga as a synonym. Ābhoga occurs in the Megha-dūta [verse 90] in the compound gaṇḍābhoga which is explained by kapola-maṇḍalam, 'the orb or circumference of the cheek,' and by gaṇḍa-sṭhālam, 'the region or neighbourhood of the cheek'. In Wilson's Dictionary stanābhoga occurs, and is said to mean 'a man with a round or full breast.' In Śāṅkara's Commentary this very compound is used for 'fulness or roundness of breast.' Doubtless, the first meaning of ābhoga is 'enjoyment,' or (adhikaraṇa) 'the place or seat of enjoyment;' thence it passes into the sense 'fulness;' thence into 'roundness,' 'circumference;' and thence into 'circuit,' 'surrounding district,' 'region,' etc. Hence, it is clear that ābhoga must here mean 'the land stretching out in the neighbourhood of the sacred grove,' 'the district, grounds, or region surrounding it,' 'the domain or demesne.' Translate, 'Even without being told, it may be known indeed that this is the circuit [domain] of the sacred grove;' or 'that here (begins) the expanse [area] of the sacred grove;' or 'that these are the grounds of the sacred grove.'

<sup>2</sup> 'For here are the (grains of) wild-rice beneath the trees, fallen from the mouths [openings] of the hollow-trunks [koṭāra] filled with parrots; in other places the polished stones (used) for bruising the fruit of the Ingudi are plainly observed; the fawns too with undeviating step [i.e., not starting aside] from having acquired confidence, bear the sound (of the voice); and the paths of the reservoirs are marked with lines by the drippings from the ends of the bark-clothes.' Mukha may be used for the mouth or opening of anything, as the hollow of a tree. Garbha, as the last member of a compound, often denotes 'filled with,' as chūrṇa-garbha nādiḥ, 'a tube filled with powder.' The Ingudi, commonly called Ingua or Jiyaputa, is a tree from the fruit of which necklaces were made of a supposed prolific efficacy; whence the botanical name Nagelia putran-jiva or jiva-putraka [Rox.] In the Raghu-vanśa (xiv., 81) there is an allusion to the fruit being used by hermits to supply oil for lamps, and in Act 2. to its furnishing them with ointment. The synonym for the tree in the Amara-kosha is tāpasa-taru, 'the anchorite's tree.' Śaṅkara calls it muni-pādapa. Abhinna-gati may also be translated 'not running away,' literally, 'not going apart or in a different direction.' Kāṭavenna explains it by arīhata-gati, 'not interrupted in their walk.' This meaning at least is suggested by abhinna-svara, 'one who does not hesitate in speaking.' The sense of the last line is settled by a passage at the end of this act, where the dust is described as falling 'on the bark dresses, moist with water, hung up (to dry) on the branches of trees [riṭapa-rishakta-jalārdravalkareshu]. In carrying these dresses from the reservoir to the trees, a line would be formed by the drippings from the corners. [śikhā = añchala Schol.]

the wind; the tint of (those trees which are) bright with fresh-sprouts is versified [partially obscured] by the rising of the smoke of the clarified butter (burnt in oblations); and in front, these young fawns, free from timidity, surely graze on the lawn of the garden, where the stalks of darbha-grass have been mown.' The Commentators explain bhinna, by anyathā-bhūta, 'altered,' 'made different;' but it may also mean 'broken,' 'interrupted,' 'partially obscured.' Arśāk = agrata 'in front,' 'near.' Darbha is another name for kuśa or sacrificial grass (Poa cynosuroides). This was the sacred ant or holy grass among the Hindūs, as was verbenā among the Romans. In preparing the ground for a sacrifice it was necessary to strew it with the blades of this grass. The officiating Brāhman were purified by sitting on it and by rubbing it between their hands. Its sanctifying qualities were very various, see Manu, ii., 43. 75, 182; iii., 208, 223, 235, 256; iv., 36; v., 115; xi., 149; and Viṣṇu Purāna, p. 106. The leaves of this grass are very long, with tapering points of which the extreme acuteness is proverbial among the Hindūs; whence the expression kuśāgra-buddhi [Raghu-vanśa, vi., 4] 'a person whose intellects are as sharp as the point of a kuśa-leaf.' Mr W. Jones quotes a passage from the Atharva-veda, in which this grass is addressed as a god. 'Thee, O Darbha! the learned proclaim a divinity, not subject to age or death; thee they call the armour of Indra, the preserver of regions, the destroyer of enemies,' etc. vol. v., p. 79. According to the Commentators this verse and the last afford an example of the anumānāntara, or figure called 'Inference.'

<sup>१</sup> 'Acting an omen,' or 'acting as if he observed an omen,' literally, 'manifesting a sign.' Nimittam is any omen or sign, such as the throbbing of the arm or eyelid. If this was felt on the right side it was a good omen in men; if on the left, a bad omen. The reverse was true of women.

<sup>२</sup> 'This hermitage is tranquil, [i.e., a peaceful spot, undisturbed by passion or emotion] and yet my arm throbs; whence can there be any result of this in such a place? But yet the gates of destiny are everywhere.' A quivering sensation in the right arm was supposed to prognosticate union with a beautiful woman. The sage Kanwa is here called 'a descendant of Káśyapa.' As a sage and Bráhmaṇ he might especially claim this celebrated personage as his progenitor; but Káśyapa, who was the son of Marichi [who was the son of Brahmá, and one of the seven Prajápatis] was a progenitor on rather a magnificent scale, as he is considered to have been the father of the gods, demons, man, fish, reptiles, and all animals, by Aditi, and twelve other daughters of Daksha. He is supposed by some to be a personification of the race who took refuge in the central Asiatic chain, in which traces of his name may be found, as Koh-kas (or Caucasus), the Caspian, Cushman, etc. [Wilson's Hindú Theatre, vol. ii., p. 12.]

The śamī tree is a kind of acacia (acacia suma), the wood of which is very hard, and supposed by the Hindús to contain fire. [Śamī abhyantara-līna-pāvakā, Raghu-vanśa, iii., 9. See also Manu, viii., 247.] The Hindús employ it to kindle their sacred fire by rubbing two dried pieces together. The legend is that Purúravas generated primeval fire, by rubbing together two branches of the Śamī and Aswattha tree. [Wilson's Hindú Theatre, p. 190.]

<sup>1</sup> 'This blooming [or youthful] body of hers, by (reason of) the bark dress fastened with delicate knots upon her shoulder (and) covering the orbs of her two breasts, does not exhibit (the fulness of) its own charms, like a flower enveloped by a calyx of brown leaves.' like bhri, is 'to nourish, or be nourished.' Thence, like bhri, it passes into the sense of 'maintain,' 'support,' 'bear,' and thence into that of 'possess,' 'enjoy,' 'exhibit,' 'make to appear.' In these last senses it may be used actively, though in the 4th conjugation. [See Manu, ix., 37. Rāmāyana, ii., 94, 10. Raghu-vanśa, xvi., 58. Mahābhārata, vol. ii., p. 186, 2607. It is curious that our English word exhibition may have the sense of 'maintenance' (Cf. Latin exhibeo). Two Bombay MSS. read svām abhikhyān instead of svām na śobhām: the meaning would then be 'maintains its own beauty' [abhikyā is so used, Raghu-vanśa, i., 46]; and this reading would be more consistent with what follows, but by the next word atharā, as the Commentators observe, svoktam ākshipati, he corrects his previous remark.

<sup>1</sup> 'Or rather, granted that the bark-dress be ill suited to her figure, yet it does not not [i.e., it really does] possess the charm of an embellishment; or less literally, 'it really does act as an embellishment to set off the beauty of her person.' This is not the only instance to be found in Kālidāsa of two negatives employed to strengthen an affirmative. See Megha-dūta, 106.

<sup>2</sup> 'The lotus, though intertwined [or overspread] with the śaivala is charming; the speck, though dark, heightens [lit., extends] the beauty of the moon; this graceful one even with her bark-dress is more lovely; for what is not an embellishment of sweet forms? [i.e., everything serves as an ornament to heighten the beauty of a figure which is naturally beautiful.] Sarasi-jam, lit., 'that which is born in a pool,' a name applicable to any aquatic plant, but especially to the different kinds of lotus (Nelumbium or Nymphaea). This beautiful plant—the varieties of which, blue, white, and red, are numerous, bears some resemblance to our water-lily. It is as favourite a subject of allusion and comparison with the Hindú poets, as the rose with the Persian. It is often figuratively used to express beauty, as 'lotus-face,' or the 'lotus of the face,' 'lotus-hands,' 'lotus-feet' [Git. Gov. passim]. It is also used by women as an ornament [Act 3. of this play], and as a cooling remedy [Ratnávalí, Act 2.] The Śaivala (Vallisneria) is an aquatic plant which spreads itself over ponds, and interweaves itself with the lotus. The interlacing of its stalks is compared in the Śringāra-tilaka (verse i.) to braided hair (dhammilla). See Sir W. Jones' Works, vol. iv., p. 113. The spots on the moon were thought to resemble those on an antelope, and hence one of the moon's names, harina-kalanka 'deer-spotted.'

The following verse, which is found in the Bengálí MSS. immediately after verse 20, and has been adopted by the Calcutta edition, is omitted in all the Devanāgarī MSS., and in the commentaries of Śankara and Kāṭavema. It is probably spurious, as it repeats the same sentiment with much harshness and some obscurity of expression :—

कठिनमपि मृगाक्ष्या वल्कलं कान्तरूपं

respects to it.' The Keśara-tree [Mimusops elengi] is the same as the Bakula or Vakula, frequent mention of which is made in some of the Purāṇas, and in the Ratnāvalī [Act 3.]. It bears a strong-smelling flower, which, according to Sir W. Jones, is even placed among the flowers of the Hindū paradise. The tree is very ornamental in pleasure-grounds. Sambhū in the caus. generally means 'to honour, or pay one's respects to another in person.' Motion towards the object seems usually, though not always, implied. Thus, sambhārayāmorājarshim, Vikramorvaśī, Act 1. And Raghu-vanśa, v., 2.; x., 56

<sup>1</sup> 'Possessed of a creeper.' This use of sa-nātha is noticeable. The literal meaning of the expression is, 'having a lord or master,' and in this sense it is used towards the end of this Act, where the devotees are said to be sa-nāthāḥ 'possessed of a guardian' in Dushyanta. A compound verb sa-nāthkri, 'to cause to be possessed of a master' is also used in the 2nd. Act of this play, and in the Hitopadeśa [line 797]. But in the present passage, sa-nātha is simply equivalent to sahita, dwitiya, yukta, 'accompanied,' 'joined,' 'furnished with.' The transition of the word into such an acceptance may be easily understood by referring to a passage in the 6th. Act of this play, and to a parallel one in the 2nd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, where the same expression is applied to an arbour (mandapa) which is said to be maṇi-sīlā-patta-sanātha, 'having a slab of marble as its master,' i.e., 'in which the most prominent and striking object is a marble seat;' or in plain words, 'an arbour furnished with a marble seat.' It is used again similarly in the 2nd. Act of this play, where the surface of a stone seat (sīlā-talam) is said to be vītāna-sanātham, 'furnished with a canopy' by the shade of a tree. It occurs twice again in the 4th. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, where the King is said to be Lakṣmī-sanātha, 'possessed of Fortune;' and the hair of Urvashi is said to be kunuma-sanātha, 'decked with flowers;' and once in the 5th. Act, where the youth Āyus is said to be sanātha with reference to dhanur-reda. See

Its union with other plants seems a favourite idea with Kālidāsa; for in the Raghu-vanśa illusion is made to its marriage with the Phalini or Priyangu [viii., 60]. It is said to be a great favourite with the bees [Raghu-vanśa, vi., 69]. In the Ratnāvalī, p. 11, l. 7, it has the epithet maṇḍalāyamāna, 'forming a circle.' Swayamvara-radhū 'a wife by self-election.' The Swayamvara or election for one's self, (swayam 'by one's self,' vara 'choice') was a form of marriage in which a princess made a free public choice of a husband from a number of assembled suitors. In very early times, the princesses of India seem to have enjoyed this singular privilege. It is not mentioned amongst the forms of marriage in Mānu, iii., 21, etc.; but the provision which is made in Manu, ix., 90, proves that a similar custom prevailed at that period. When marriageable, she is there told to wait for three years; and after that time, if she fail to obtain a suitable husband, she is to choose for herself; [samāna-jāti-guṇam varam swayam vṛṇīta. Schol.] She is then called swayam-rarā. In the Mahābhārata we have a beautiful account of the Swayamvara of Damayantī (who chooses Nala), and of Draupadī (who chooses Arjuna, p. 52); and in the Raghu-vansa, chap. vi., of the Swayamvara of Indumatī, sister of Bhoja, king of Vidarbha (who chooses Aja, the son of Raghu). See also Nalodaya, i., 30. Even the goddess Lakshmi is said to have exercised this privilege. See the allusion to the Lakshmi-swayamvara at the beginning of the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī.

<sup>1</sup> 'At a charming season, indeed, has the union between this pair, the (Mālikā or jasmine) creeper and the (Sahakāra) tree, taken place. The Light of the Grove (has) youthfulness by (its) fresh blossoms, [i.e., its fresh blossoms give it all the bloom of a young bride] and the Sahakāra is capable of enjoyment by reason of (its) young shoots (just) formed.' Vyatikara is properly 'mutual action,' 'co-operation,' hence 'union,' 'blending,' 'intertwining,' 'intermingling.' [See Megha-dūta, 15.] So also vyatikara-sukham, 'mutual enjoyment.' The prepositions vi and ati in composition imply both reciprocity and contrariety: hence, in the Hitopadeśa, line 2319, vyatikara signifies 'reverse,' 'turn in affairs.' Baddha-pallaratayā, 'by its state of young shoots formed on it.' This is a very idiomatic use of the instrumental case of the abstract noun ending in tā, to denote 'by reason of,' 'on account of.' The root bandh has often the sense of 'to form,' 'produce,' thus, baddhanti phalam [Raghu-vanśa, xii., 69]. Drumeshu swayam phalam baddham

[Kumāra-sam. v. 60]. Upabhoga-kshama is found in the prologue of this play in connection with grishma-samaya [page 5, note 1], and in the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī with avakāśa. The first meaning of kshama is 'patient,' 'enduring.' In this compound, and many others, it is equivalent to yogya, 'fit,' 'capable,' 'suitable;' so drishti-kshama, 'capable of being seen,' 'visible.'

<sup>1</sup> Api nāma, 'would that.' In this sense it occurs also in the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, api nāma Purūravā bhaveyam, 'would that I were Purūravas!'

<sup>2</sup> 'Can this (lady) possibly be sprung from a wife dissimilar in class (to that) of the father of the family.' Api nāma is here equivalent to 'may be,' 'can it possibly be,' 'I wonder whether,' expressive of some doubt [evam sambhavyate. Schol.] Kshetra = kalatra, 'a wife;' asavarna = asamāna-jātiya 'of a different (and inferior) tribe or caste.' A Brāhman might marry a Kshatriyā, i.e., a woman of the military or kingly class next below him [Manu, iii., 13], and the female offspring of such a marriage would belong to the mixed class called mūrdhābhishikta or mūrdhāvāsikta 'head-anointed' [Manu, x., 6], and would be a suitable object of affection for a Kshatriya, who in his kingly character was a múrdhābhishikta also. But if Śakuntalā were a pure Brāhmaṇī woman, both on the mother's and father's side, she would be ineligible as the wife of a Kshatriya [Manu, iii., 13].

<sup>1</sup> 'But, have done with [away with] doubt.' Atharvā is used to correct a previous thought [pakṣhāntare]. Kṛitam when used adverbially is like alam, and requires the instrumental case.

<sup>2</sup> 'Without any doubt she is capable of marriage with a Kshatriya, since my honourable soul has a longing towards her: for in matters that are subjects of doubt, the tendencies [inclinations, promptings] of the hearts of good men are an authoritative guide (to the truth.)' The meaning is, 'If this damsel be the daughter of a Brāhmaṇ by a Brāhmaṇ or woman of the same caste, then why should I be conscious of such a sudden liking for one whom I could never hope to marry. This feeling of attraction and sympathy would not arise spontaneously in the breast of an honourable man, excepting towards a legitimate object of affection: for in such matters, the secret prompting [inner voice] of the heart is decisive.' He therefore concludes that she must have been of mixed origin, with some Kshatriya or regal blood in her veins; and discovers afterwards that she was, in fact, the daughter of the Rājārshi Viśwāmitra (who was originally of the Kshatriya or regal tribe) by an Apsaras. Dushyanta, as a king, belonged of course to the Kshatriya or military caste. This caste came next to the Brāhmaṇical and according to Manu [i., 87] sprang from the arm of Brahmā. They wore a girdle of múrvā and a sacrificial cord of hemp [Manu, ii., 42, 44], and were entirely concerned with warfare and military affairs. The Mahābhārata relates that they were exterminated by Paraśu-Rāma, the representative of the Brāhmaṇical tribe, in revenge for the murder of his father, the sage Jamadagni, by the sons of Kārtavīrya. This fable is founded on the historical fact that, at some period or other, struggles, arising out of mutual jealousy of each others' encroachments, took place between the military and sacerdotal classes; and that the former did in the end succumb to the superior power and intelligence of the priests. The example of Viśwāmitra proves that it was possible for a Kshatriya, by the practice of religious austerities, to raise himself to the rank of a Brāhman. There are also other anomalies of caste to be found; for the Vishnu-Purāna makes mention of a number of men, half-warriors, half-priests, Kshatriyas by birth, and Brāhmanas by profession, called Āngirasas or descendants of Angiras, who were said to have sprung from Nabhāga [Vish. Pur., p. 359. Mahābh. Selections, p. 23.] Kings, however, were never chosen from the Brāhmaṇical class, but were properly Kshatriyas [Manu, vii., 2]; though there was no positive law against their belonging to the two inferior classes of Vaiśyas and Śūdras, or even to the three mixed classes [sankaras] formed by intermarriage with the others, viz., Mūrdhābhi-shiktas, Māhishyas and Karāṇas [Manu, x., 6]. One dynasty of kings of the line of Nanda were actually Śūdras, and kept the Kshatriyas in subjection [Vishnu Purāna, p. 467.] In fact, the king was but a high officer appointed to train the army, instruct in military exercises, administer justice, and execute the laws. These onerous duties were sufficient to deter the Brāhmanas from desiring a rank or privileges which were inconsistent with their love of dignified repose. Āryam = samaryādam, 'correct,' 'upright' [Schol.] Pramāṇam, 'that by which any thing is measured;' hence, 'a criterion or standard of truth,' 'a sure guide,' 'an authority' [pramāṇakāraṇam, 'a cause of true knowledge,' Schol.] In this sense it is usually found in the singular number, neuter gender, though in opposition to a masculine or feminine noun, or even to a noun in the plural number, as here. Thus, also Vedih pramāṇam 'the Vedas are an authority.' See also Hitopadeśa, lines 169, and 1465. Pravṛtti, 'continuous flow;' hence, 'a course of action,' 'tendency,' 'inclination.'

<sup>1</sup> 'Nevertheless [however the suggestions of my heart are to be relied upon] I will accurately ascertain about her.' Upalapsye = jñāsyē, 'I will inform myself.' Schol.

[Bhartri-Hari, i., 26.] Hata is here equivalent to mano-hata, 'disappointed,' or rather 'kept in anxious suspense.' Kṛit = kṛitārtha or kṛita-kṛitya 'one who has gained the object of his desire, and is in full enjoyment of it.'

All the Devanāgarī MSS. read parittādam [Sans. paritrātum], but the Bengālī read parittāne [Sans.

paritrāṇe], and the Cāleuttā kā satti amhe paritrāṇe. There is no difficulty in admitting the infinitive, which may well stand for the dative paritrāṇāya [see page 14, note 1], especially in Prākṛit, which possesses no dative. A precisely similar construction occurs in the Mālavikāgnī-mitra, p. 55, l. 13, kā vayan jetum; and again, p. 40, l. 16, ke āvām parigrahāya [Prākṛit parigghaṣṣa, the genitive being put for the Sanskrit dative.]

serve as water for the feet.' Water for the feet was one of the first things invariably presented to a guest in all Eastern countries. Should a guest arrive, a seat is to be offered to him, and his feet are to be washed and food is to be given him. [Vishnu Purāṇa, page 305. Compare also Luke vii., 44.] Idam i.e., vṛkṣhārtham ānītam ulakam. Schol.

<sup>1</sup> Sūnritā gir 'kind yet sincere language,' 'complimentary and friendly words without flattery' (priyam satyan-cha vachanam). This is one of the four things with which even the poorest man was to greet a guest. 'Grass and earth to sit on, water to wash the feet, and fourthly, friendly yet sincere speech (vāk sūnritā) are never refused in the houses of the good, even though they be poor.' Manu, iii., 101. Hitopadeśa, line 301.

<sup>2</sup> 'On the raised-seat under the Saptaparna-tree, cool with much shade, having sat down for a short time, let your honour cause removal of fatigue.' According to Śāṅkara, prachhāya = prakṛiṣṭā yā chhāyā, 'excessive shade.' The other Commentators explain it by prakṛiṣṭā chhāyā yatra dēśaḥ, 'a place where there is excessive shade,' and by prakṛiṣṭā chhāyā yasyāḥ, 'having excessive shade.' A parallel passage occurs in the Mālavikāgni-mitra, page 3, line 20, 'prachchhāya-śītale śilāpattake nisannā,' etc. It seems clear that the effect of pra in this word is to give intensity to the original idea. It is needless to regard it either as a Tatpurusha or Karmadhāraya compound, although it is in such compounds especially that chhāyā becomes chhāya. [See page 5, note 1, and Raghu-vaṇśa, iv., 20; xii., 50. Megha-dūta, verse 103. Pāṇini, ii., 4, 22, 25.] Sapta-parṇa, 'a tree having seven leaves on a stalk' (Echites scholaris), called also vishama-chhada, 'having an odd number of leaves,' and vishāla-twach, 'having a broad bark' [Raghu-vaṇśa, iv., 23.] Vedikā = vīśrāma-sthānam, 'place of repose or rest.' Schol. It was probably a quadrangular raised-seat, something in the form of an altar, and covered with a roof supported by pillars, used as a kind of arbour or summer-house, for sitting or standing under. In this case it seems to have been erected under a Saptaparna-tree. Sapta-parṇa-

<sup>1</sup> Ātma-gatam and sva-gatam (lit., 'gone to one's self') are used in theatrical language like the English 'aside' to denote that the words which follow are supposed to be spoken privately, as if to the speaker's self, and not in the hearing of any one but the audience. [Ananya-prakāśam: Schol.] Gata, 'gone,' at the end of a compound is used loosely to express relationship and connexion without any necessary implication of motion. It may mean simply 'in connexion with,' 'in relation to;' or, as here, 'with exclusive reference to,' 'addressed exclusively to.'

<sup>2</sup> 'How now! can it really be that, having looked upon this man, I am become susceptible of [lit., accessible to] an emotion inconsistent with a grove devoted to penance?' Vikāra is any alteration or transition from the natural and quiescent state of the soul; hence any emotion, whether of joy, grief, anger, etc. Kim is used kutsādyam, 'disdainfully,' and is equivalent to katham eva jātam, 'How can it have happened;' Schol.

direction something similar to ātma-gatam, but denotes that the speech which follows is supposed to be audible by one other person, to whom a private signal is made. 'That which is spoken apart from the rest, with a signal, such as holding up three fingers of the hand (tripatāka), being a mutual speech (between two), is called jantantikam.' Śāṅkara and Śāhit-Darṣ., 177.

<sup>1</sup> 'Who can this be (who being) lively (yet) dignified in mien, appears as if endowed with majesty (while) speaking to us sweetly.' Chatura, 'lively,' 'sprightly,' 'animated,' may perhaps mean here, 'polite,' 'courteous,' in relation to madhuraṃ ālapan. Gambhīra, 'profound,' is used metaphorically for one whose thoughts and feelings are deep or suppressed, 'reserved' 'dignified,' 'not betraying emotion.' The oldest MS. reads mahuram; the others mahuram piam; but piam belongs properly to the margin.

<sup>2</sup> Prakāśam, 'aloud,' another theatrical direction denoting that the words which follow are to be made audible to all, those which precede having been spoken aside.

<sup>3</sup> 'What race of royal-sages is adorned by your honour?' A Rājārshi is a king or man of the Kshatriya and military class who has attained to the rank of a Rishi or saint by the practise of religious austerities. Such were Ikshvāku, Purúravas, Dushyanta, etc. There are six other classes of Rishis. [See the word 'Saint' in the English and Sanskrit Dictionary.] The Rājārshi is inferior to the Brahmarshi or 'Bráhmaṇ-saint,' but it was possible for a Rājārshi to raise himself to the rank of the latter, and therefore to the state of a Bráhmaṇ, by very severe penance, as exemplified in the story of the celebrated Viśvámitra, son of Gádhi, and father of <sup>N</sup>akuntalá. [See Rámáyana, I., xx., 20; lxv., 18. Astra-śikshá, 118.]

This is a very unusual sense of the word, but all the Devanāgarī MSS. agree in reading apahára. The Bengālī have parihára, which is also explained by sangopanam. The oldest Bengālī MS. of Purn, for the administration of justice, have arrived at this sacred grove, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the (religious) rites are free from obstruction.' The religious rites and sacrifices of holy men were often disturbed by certain evil spirits or goblins called Rākshasas, who were the determined enemies of piety and devotion. No great sacrifice or religious ceremony was ever carried on without an attempt on the part of these demons to impede its celebration; and the most renowned saints found it necessary on such occasions to acknowledge their dependence on the strong arm of the military class, by seeking the aid of warriors and heroes. The inability of holy men, who had attained the utmost limit of spiritual power, to cope with the spirits of evil, and the superiority of physical force in this respect is very remarkable. [See Rāmāyana, I. xx., xxi., xxxii., and the end of Act 3. of this play].

<sup>२</sup> 'Understanding the gestures of both,' i.e., of Śakuntalā and Dushyanta. Ākāra = cheshtā or ingitam, 'a gesture,' 'sign,' or rather the state of mind as evidenced by gestures and outward appearances, such as change of colour, etc.

honour to his guest by offering him the best of his substance and property. See page 32, note 5. There is here evidently a double-entendre. Śāṅkara explains sarva-svām by phala-mūlādikam, 'fruits, roots, and other necessities of life.' Fruits and roots were the chief food of anchorites and constituted their whole substance and worldly treasure. With an offering of these they were commanded to honour every one who came to their hermitage. [Rāmāyaṇa, I., lii., 16, and Ixi., 4. Manu, vi., 7.] The allusion, however, evidently is to Śakuntalā, who might be regarded as the holy father's most valuable possession and treasure.

<sup>1</sup> 'Get off with you! having formed some (idea) in your heart, you are speaking.' Hṛdaye or manasi kri is not an unusual idiom for 'to turn or cogitate in the mind.' [See Rāmāyaṇa, II., 64, 8.] Apetam is the 2nd. pers. du. imp. of i, 'to go,' with apa.

<sup>2</sup> Sakhī-gatam, 'relating to your friend.' [Śakuntalā-vishayakam : Schol.] This use of gata is noticeable, see the note to ātma-gata, p. 37, note 1. Only one Devanāgarī MS. reads bhavatyau; but this is supported by the oldest Bengālī, which also adds kinapi.

<sup>3</sup> 'His reverence Kāśyapa [see note 1, p. 22] lives in the constant practice-of-austerities.' Brahman is properly the Supreme Spirit or Being from which all created things are supposed to emanate and into which they are absorbed. The dictionary gives three other senses—1. The practice of austerities; 2. The Vedas; 3. Holy knowledge. The first is the one here required. Śāṅkara explains it by tapas, i.e., the practice of bodily mortification and penance: Kāṭavema by brahmacharyam, 'the practice of continence.'

<sup>1</sup> 'There is a certain Rájars̥hi [or royal-sage, i.e., both king and saint] of great majesty, whose family name [patronymic] is Kausika.' This was the great Viśwámitra (a descendant of Kuśa or Kuśika), whose story—he being the preceptor of Ráma-chandra—is told in the Rámáyana, I., li. lxv., and xxxv. He is there said to be the son of Gádhi (a prince of the Lunar dynasty, king of Gádhi-pur, or the ancient Kanouj) who is said to be the son of Kuśa-nátha, who is the son of Kuśa or Kuśika. According to the Vishnu Purāṇa the following is the pedigree of Viśwámitra. One of the sons of Purúravas, a prince of the Lunar dynasty [see Vikramorvaśi] was Amávasu. Thence in direct succession came Bhíma, Kāñchana, Jahnú, Sumantu, Ajaka, Valákaśwa and Kuśa. The latter had two sons, Kuśám̐ba and Kuśa-nátha, but Gádhi was the son of Kuśám̐ba, and was said to be an incarnation of Indra (who is hence sometimes called Kauśika); for Kuśám̐ba had engaged in great penance, to obtain a son who should be equal to Indra, and the latter being alarmed, took upon himself the character of Kuśám̐ba's son. Gádhi had a daughter, Satyavati, who married a Bráhmaṇ named Richika, son of Bhrigu. This Richika—with the view of securing to himself a son who should be an illustrious Bráhmaṇ, and to his father-in-law, a son of great prowess—made two messes of food, one for his own wife, and the other for the wife of Gádhi; infusing into one the qualities suited to a Bráhmaṇ, and into the other the properties of power and heroism. The two wives exchanged messes, and so it happened that the wife of Gádhi had a son, Viśwámitra, who, though a Kshatriya, was born with the inclinations of a Bráhmaṇ; and the wife of Richika had a son, the sage Jamadagni, who was the father of the warrior-priest Paraśu-ráma, she having by her entreaties induced her husband to transfer the effects of the exchange of food from her son to her grandson. There is something like anachronism in the history of Viśwámitra. Satyavati, his sister, was the grandmother of Paraśu-ráma, and it was not till the close of the latter's career that Rámachandra appeared on the field and became the pupil of Viśwámitra. At any rate the Rishi must have been very old. Indeed, in the Rámáyana he is stated to have mortified himself for two thousand years before he attained the rank of a Rishi; for many years more before his cohabitation with Menaká, which led to the birth of Śakuntalá; and for many thousand years more before he became a Bráhmaṇ. It was not till after this period that he became the preceptor of Ráma-chandra, but no chronological inconsistency is too great for Hindú mythology.

<sup>1</sup> 'Know him to be the father of our friend; but father Kanwa is the (reputed) father of her, through the fostering of her body, etc., when deserted. Prabhava = janma-hetu, 'the operative cause of being,' i.e., a father. Schol.

<sup>2</sup> 'The story of Viśwámitra, as told in the Rámáyana, is briefly this. On his accession to the throne in the room of his father Gádhi, in the course of a tour through his dominions, he visited the hermitage of the Muni Vaśishṭha one of the ten Brahmádikas or Prajápatis, sons of Brahmá. There the cow-of-plenty excited his cupidity. He offered the Muni untold treasures in exchange for the cow, but being refused, prepared to take it by force. A long war ensued between the King and the Muni (symbolical of the struggles between the Kshatriya and Bráhmaṇical classes) which ended in the defeat of Viśwámitra, whose vexation was such, that he devoted himself to austerities in the hope of attaining the condition of a Bráhmaṇ. The Rámáyana goes on to recount how by gradually increasing the rigour of his bodily mortification through thousands of years, he successively earned the title of Rájjarshi [I., lvii., 5], Rishi [lxiii., 2], Maharshi [lxiii., 19], and finally, Brahmarshi [lxv., 18]. It was not till he had gained this last title that Vaśishṭha consented to acknowledge his equality with himself, and ratify his admission into the Bráhmaṇical state. It was at the time of Viśwámitra's advancement to the rank of a Rishi, and whilst he was still a Kshatriya, that Indra and the inferior gods, jealous of his increasing power—as exhibited in his transporting King Triśanku to the region of the stars, and in saving Śunahsephas, the son of his own brother-in-law Richika, out of the hands of Indra, to whom he had been promised by King Ambarisha as a victim in a sacrifice—sent the nymph Menaká, to seduce him from his life of mortification and continence. The Rámáyana records his surrender to this temptation, and relates that the nymph was his companion in the hermitage for ten years, but does not allude to the birth of Śakuntalá, during that period. It only informs us that at the end of ten years the Rishi having come to himself, extricated himself from this hindrance (niyama-vighna), and abandoning the nymph, departed into another region.

<sup>1</sup> 'Such is the fear which there is to the (inferior) gods of the devotion of others!' It may be remarked here that, according to the Hindú system, Indra and the other inferior deities were not the possessors of Swarga, or heaven, by inalienable and indefeasible right. They accordingly viewed with jealousy and even alarm, any extraordinary persistency by a human being in acts of penance, as it raised him to a level with themselves; and if carried beyond a certain point, enabled him to dispossess them of paradise. Indra was therefore the enemy of excessive devotion, and had in his service numerous nymphs [Apsaras], such as Menaká, Rambhá, and Urváśí, who were called his 'weapons' [Indrasya praharāṇāni, Vikram., Act I.] and whose business it was to impede by their seductions, the devotions of holy men.

intoxicating beauty [form] of that (nymph).’ The commentators consider cosantodāra to be a compound of vasanta and udāra; but odāra is a legitimate Prākṛit contraction for acatāra, although avadāra would be equally correct. Compare odansayanti for avatansayanti [p. 5, note 3], hodi for havadi or bharati, jedi for jayadi or jayati, etc. Lassen’s Instit. Prāk., p. 176. Acatāra is derived from acati, ‘to descend,’ and applies especially to the descent of a god from heaven. There can be nothing inappropriate in connecting it with Vasanta, ‘the Spring,’ often personified as a deity. See a passage in the 2nd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, Pekkhadu bhavam vasantā-cadārashūdam assa ahirā-mattanaṃ pamadaraṇassa, ‘let your honour observe the delightfulness of this pleasure-garden manifested by the descent of Spring.’ Ummādayitrikam [Kāṭavema] is for ummādayitri, the neuter of the causal noun of agency, ‘that which causes to go mad or be intoxicated’ [adhairya-janakam, ‘causing unsteadiness,’ Schol.]

<sup>१</sup> ‘What (happened) afterwards is quite understood’ [or guessed by me.] According to Pānini (v. 3. 27) the affix tāt, in words like parastāt, adhastāt, may stand for the nominative case, as well as for the ablative and locative. Hence parastāt is equivalent to para-crittāntah, ‘the rest of the story,’ ‘the subsequent particulars.’

<sup>३</sup> ‘It is fitting (that she should be the daughter of an Apsaras). How otherwise could there be the birth of this beautiful-form amongst mortal females? the tremulously-radiant flash does not rise from the surface of the earth (but descends from the skies).’ Apsarah-sambharatvam is the nominative case to upapadyate, Schol. According to Kāṭavema, prabhā-taralam

[prabhayā cañchalām] jyotiḥ, is a periphrasis for vidyut, 'lightning;' but Śankara applies it also to the beams of the sun and moon. The comparison of the unearthly beauty of a nymph to the radiance of lightning is appropriate. See Megha-dūta, verse 40.

<sup>1</sup> 'My desire has found (free) scope,' i.e., 'Since it is certain that she is not a Brāhmaṇī woman, [asavarnatva-niścayāt, from the certainty of her not being of the same class with the holy father], it is clear that my desire is directed towards an attainable object.' Avakāśa means 'free course, 'range,' 'power of expatiating.' A similar phrase occurs later in this Act, labdhivakāśa me prārthanā. Kāṭavema there explains it by labdhāśrayaḥ or sārtha me manorathah.

<sup>2</sup> 'Nevertheless, having heard the prayer for a husband uttered in joke by her female-friend [see page 29, line 10], my heart is held in suspense and anxious,' i.e., anxious to know the truth, as to whether she is really destined for marriage, or for an ascetic life; and fearful lest at some former time her husband may have been decided upon (pūrvam asyā varo nirṇīto na vā. Kāṭav.). Śankara interprets vara-prārthanā by svāmyabhilāṣa, 'wish for a husband.' Dhṛita-dwaidhā-bhāva-kātaram is a complex Dwandwa compound. Dwaidhā-bhāva, 'a state of difference, distraction, doubt.'

Alam*, in the sense of prohibiting or forbidding, is more usually found with the instrum. case of the noun, but, like khalu, it may sometimes be used in this sense with the indeclinable participles in tud and ya, thus alam dattvā, 'enough of giving,' or 'having given, it is enough;' so khalu pītvā, 'having drunk, hold!' Wilkins' Grammar, rule 737. The Bengālī MSS. read 'alam vichāritena.'

opposed to the ways of love, to be observed by her (merely) until her gift-in-marriage; or, on the contrary (āho), will she live to the end (of her life) along with the female deer, her favourites (from) having eyes like her own? Dr. Bochtlingk remarks that sakṣim te jñātum icchhāmi kim anyā, etc., is equivalent to jñātum icchhāmi kim sakṣya te, etc., 'I wish to know whether this vow is to be observed by thy friend,' etc. He gives instances of a similar construction in Draup., iv., 5. Mahābh., iii., 269. Vaikhānasa, anything relating to a vaikhānasa or hermit, tena kṛitam proktam tā vratam vaikhānasam, tattva niyatāranya-rāsa-rūpam, 'the vow which is performed or enjoined by him is called vaikhānasa, and that consists in always living in the woods.' Śāṅkara. Apradānāt – pradāna-paryantam, or āvirāhāt, 'up to the period of her marriage.' In the time of Manu every Hindū girl was given away in marriage before the season of maturity (ritoh prak pradānakāla), and that father incurred great disgrace who did not so give her away. It was deemed highly reprehensible if the betrothed husband did not take her to his own house, when the marriageable period of life arrived. See Manu, ix., 4, with commentary. Vyāpāra-rodhi madanasya -kāma-kriyā-nirāśakam, 'hindering amatory actions.' According to Kāṭavema ātma-saṁśīkṣhaṇa-vallabhābhir may be optionally resolved into ātma-saṁśīkṣhaṇa-vallabhā ābhir. Āho, a particle of doubt or asking, is said by the commentators to be used pakṣāntare or vikalpe, i.e., antithetically, or, in stating an opposite alternative.

<sup>१</sup> 'Even in the practice of religious duties this person [Śakuntalā] is dependant on (the will of) another [viz., Kanva]; nevertheless, it is the purpose of the Guru to give her away to a suitable husband.' According to Manu (ix., 2, 3), women were never to be deemed fit for independence. Day and night they were to be held by their protectors in subjection. But in certain matters, such as lawful recreations, and if they chose to enter upon a religious life, they were to be left at their own disposal. It seems that even in those matters Śakuntalā was not her own mistress. The holy father had enjoined a life of penance upon her, but had resolved that her residence in the hermitage should not be perpetual. Api śabdena dharmā- charaṇasya siva-chhanda-karaṇīyatvam suchitam, 'by the word 'even' it is indicated that the duties of religion are generally to be performed as a voluntary act.' Kāṭavema. Amara-Sinha explains sankalpa by mānasam karma, 'a mental act or resolution.' The rule of Vararuchi (i., 22) by which the Sanskrit guru becomes garua in Prākṛit, only applies to the adjective.

<sup>1</sup> 'This prayer is not difficult of realization,' i.e., A suitable husband, about whom there is this wish, is not difficult to be obtained; prārthanā-sādhena tad-rishayo raro lakṣhyate: Kāṭavema. According to this, it would appear that the word prārthanā refers to the prayer supposed to have been made by Kaṇwa, that he might find a suitable husband for his foster-child.

<sup>2</sup> 'O (my) heart! become hopeful [possessed of desire]; now the certainty (of what was a matter) of doubt has come to pass. This was the doubt mentioned before, at page 30, line 1, with note 2. The word antah-karaṇa [line 5], is there used for hṛdaya. Yad [Śakuntalā-rūpam vastu] agnim tarkayasi, 'The thing, [viz., Śakuntalā] which thou imaginedst fire:' Śāṅkara. The power of a Brāhman, especially if exhibited in anger, is compared to fire [Verse 41 of this play. Bhaṭṭi, i., 23. Mahābh., I., 3010.] There may be some allusion to this here, or it may simply mean that, supposing Śakuntalā to have been a Brāhman woman, she would have been as inapproachable to a Kshatriya as a flame of fire. Sparśa-kṣhamam = samparka-yogyam [see page 28, note 1, at end].

The Bengālī have, Uttāya jighrikshur iva icchhām nigrihya, 'Rising up as if desirous of seizing her (and then) restraining his intention.' It is clear from what follows that, although Dushyanta did not advance towards Śakuntalā, yet he must have indicated what was passing in his mind by some gesture. It appears from page 37, line 5, that the whole party were seated. The Bengālī reading supposes that, with the idea of arresting her departure, he started up and then checked himself.

arm] excessively red through tossing the watering-pot. Even now her unnaturally-strong breathing causes a heaving of her breast; a collection of drops of perspiration, impeding (the play of) the Śirisha in her ears, has formed upon her face: her dishevelled locks, the fillet (that confined them) having given way [fallen], are held together with one hand.' Bāhu is the arm from the shoulder-joint [ansa] to the wrist, and does not include the karabha, or part from the wrist to the fingers. It is divided into two parts, the upper arm, praganda, or that part of the arm from the elbow to the shoulder; and the lower arm, prakoshtha, commonly called the fore-arm, extending from the elbow to the wrist [see Amara-kosha, pp. 149, 150]. Atilohita-talanu is a Bahuvrīhi compound, in agreement with bāhū; talanu cannot, therefore, be translated by 'the palms of the hands.' Wilson gives 'fore-arm' as one meaning of tala, and Śankara explains it by bhajodara. It may possibly mean the under-surface of the arms, which would be reddened by the exertion of lifting and tossing the watering-pot. Pramāṇādhika = svābharika-mānād adhika, 'more than natural,' 'undue.' Baddham 'formed' [see page 28, note 1]. Jālakam, properly a 'net-work'—hence, 'a collection [samūha, Schol.] or assemblage of anything.' Śankara observes that her face was spotted with drops of perspiration so as to resemble net-work. So śvedam ānana-vilagna-jālakam: Raghu-vaṇśa ix. 68. Karṇa-śirisha-rodhi [see page 5, note 3]. The drops of perspiration would prevent the play of the pendent flower by causing it to adhere to her cheek [Sthirī-karṇāt: Śankara. Sanślesha-kāritvāt: Kaṭav.]. A similar idea occurs in the Megha-dūta, verse 28, where the lotus of the ears is described as faded by the act of removing the perspiration from the cheeks in the hot weather. The lotus-flower, or one of its petals, seems to have furnished as common an ornament for the ear as the śirisha: [Megha-dūta, verses 69, 46.] Paryākulāḥ = vikīrṇāḥ, 'scattered.'

selves,' 'This is the king.' Kātavema]. All the Devanāgarī MSS. read nāma-mudrāksharāni. Mudrā is here, not a 'seal-ring,' but 'the seal or engraved stone on the ring;' nāma-mudrā, lit., 'name-seal,' is a seal with a name engraved on it, a signet-seal. So in the Mālavikāgnimitra, [p. 5, l. 9, and 48, 4.] ndga-mudrā-sanātham anguliyakam, and sarpa-mudrakam anguliyakam, 'a ring possessed of a snake-seal,' or 'snake-stone seal.' Anuvāchya = patitwa, 'having read,' 'having decyphered.' Vach and anuvach in the causal have generally this sense in dramatic composition.

<sup>1</sup> 'Enough of considering me to be different (from what I am); this (ring) is a present (received) from the king: therefore understand me to be the king's officer.' Alam anyathā sambhārya = alam anyathā sambhāvanayā, [see page 47, note 3] 'Do not imagine me to be the king himself; I am only the king's servant, and this is his ring, which he has given me to serve as my credentials.' Pratigraho yam, i.e., idam anguriyakam mayi dattam: Śāṅkara. The verb pratigrah signifies especially 'to receive a gift,' and requires a genitive case: thus, Rājnah [or nripasya] na pratigrihṇīyāt, 'Let him not receive any gift from the king.' Manu iv., 84. Pratigraha is 'that which is received' [pratigrihyate]; hence, any gift.

[see page 33, note 2.] This use of the genitive case for the dative, and of the future pass. part. for the verbal noun, is peculiar to Prākṛit. The idiom of Sanskrit would require, visarjanāya rodhanāya vā, 'for loosing or binding.'

Kātavema observes that it may be inferred that this was a wild elephant [vanya-gaja], and not an elephant belonging to the king, from its being frightened at the sight of the royal chariot [syandana]. Compare a scene in the Ratnāvali, page 27.

<sup>१</sup> The word Vidūshaka means 'a witty, merry, facetious person;' 'a good-natured jolly fellow.' In dramatic language it is the title given to the jocose companion and confidential friend of the ndyaka, or hero of the piece. This character acts the same part towards the king or prince who is the hero, that her female companions and confidantes do towards the heroine of the play. He is his constant attendant, and, by a curious regulation, is to be a Brāhmaṇ, that is to say, of a caste higher than that of the king himself; and yet his business is to excite mirth by being ridiculous in person, age, and attire. Śāṅkara says that he is to be grey-haired (palitah), hump-backed (kubjah), lame (khañjuh), and with ugly features (vikritānanah); that the chief part of all that he says is to be humorous and nonsensical; and that he is to be allowed access to the female apartments (antah-pura-charah; see Wilson's Dramatic System, page xliii). In fact, he is a species of buffoon. His attempts at wit, which are never very successful, and his allusions to the pleasures of the table, of which he is a confessed votary, are absurdly contrasted with the sententious solemnity of the despairing hero, crossed in the prosecution of his love-suit. The shrewdness of the heroine's confidantes never seems to fail them under the most trying circumstances; but the clumsy interference of the Vidūshaka in the intrigues of his friend, only serves to augment his difficulties, and occasions many an awkward dilemma. As he is the universal butt, and is allowed in return full liberty of speech, he fills a character which is very necessary for the enlivenment of the otherwise dull monotony of a Hind drama. He is called by Śāṅkara the upandya of the piece, or the ndyakanya upandyakah, a kind of sub-hero, or assistant to the hero: see page 46, note 3. Kāṭavema says, 'The Vidūshaka

<sup>1</sup> 'Even in the night it cannot be slept peacefully (by me) having (my) joints strained by running along side of (his) horse.' Such is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS. The Bengālī have turaga-gaṇam cha saddena, 'by the noise of horses and elephants.' Anu is either 'after' or 'by the side of.' Kand or kadi, 'to break, tear, separate,' is not so common as khand; but the latter would be too strong a word in this passage. The genitive mama, 'of me,' must be supplied after śayitāryam. The instrum. case is more usual after the fut. pass. part., but not more correct.

<sup>2</sup> 'Then at the very earliest dawn, by the sons of slaves hunting the birds, I am awakened by the din of taking the forest.' Mahati-pratyūshe, lit., 'at great dawn.' Compare mahā-rātra, 'mid-night,' and the French 'de grand matin.' Dasyāh-putraih stands for dāst-putraih, and is to be regarded as one compound. Śaṅkara quotes a note of Pāṇini [vi. 3. 22.] to the effect that the genitive case in this compound is used ākrośe in abusing and reviling. So also in vrishalyāh-putraih for vrishali-putraih. Vana-grahana denotes 'surrounding and taking possession of a wood for the purpose of hunting the animals it contains [mṛiga-grahanaṁ : K.]' Those who do so are called, further on in this Act, vana-grahināḥ, which Kāṭavema explains by vanāvarodhakāḥ, 'those who inclose a wood and obstruct the points of egress.'

<sup>3</sup> 'Even by all this my trouble does not come to an end; (for) afterwards upon the (old) boil, (another small) boil is produced.' Iyatā = etāvatā, 'by this much,' 'by so much.' Nishkrāmati = śamyati, 'ceases.' Pitakā vishphotaka, 'a pustule,' 'a small boil,' 'a pimple.' This was probably a pro-

<sup>2</sup> 'Even to-day (the light of) dawn (broke) upon the eyes (of him) thinking of that very (damsel);' that is, according to Chandra-śekhara, jāgrata eva rajanī nirgatā, 'the night passed away whilst he was still awake.' Kātavama remarks, 'By this it may be inferred that, with thinking of her, he had not closed his eyes all night.' Akshṇoh, i.e., drīṣor unmīlatoḥ satoh, 'on his eyes being (still) open.' The word satoh in the commentary indicates that, akshṇoh is in the locative case dual.

(itself) by observing her gestures (of love). Even though love has not accomplished its object the desire of both (of us) anticipates enjoyment.' Kāman; see note 3, page 54. Na sulabhā, i.e., from her relationship to the Rishi: K. Tad-bhāva-darśanāśvāsi; such is the reading of all the Bengālī MSS., and of Śāṅkara. The Devanāgarī read tad-bhāva-darśanāśvāsi where āśvāsi properly means 'active,' 'kept in activity,' 'stimulated to exertion,' i.e., exerting itself to obtain her. But it may be questioned whether āśvāsi be not preferable, especially as Kāṭavema, though he writes āśvāsi, explains it by santushyati, 'is cheered,' and by āśvāsitam, 'consoled.' Bhāva = śringāra-cheshṭā, 'the expression of amorous sentiments by gestures.' The gestures here referred to are described in the next verse, beginning snigdham, etc. Darśana is either 'seeing, looking at,' [avalokana: Ś.] or, 'exhibiting, showing,' [sākshāt-karana, K.] In the latter case, translate 'by her exhibition of amorous gestures.' Ubhaya, i.e., nāyaka-nāyikayoh or strī-purushayoh. Prārthanā = abhilāsha, 'longing.'

tender glance was given [lit., it was looked tenderly]; and whereas by the weight of (her) hips she moved [lit., it was moved by her] slowly, as if from dalliance; and whereas by (her) detained in these (words) 'Do not go,' [see page 51, line 2], that friend was addressed with disdain; all that certainly had reference to me. Ah! (how) a lover discovers (what is) his own? Vikshitam is here the pass. past part., and snigdham an adverb: Ś. Avaruddhayā, or, according to some MSS., uparuddhayā — kṛita-gamana-bādhayā or kṛita-gati-vyāghātayā. Mat-parāyanam = mad-vishayakam, 'relating to me.' Aho here denotes wonder. [āchārye: K.] Ścatām = ātmyatām or svakiyatām, i.e., mat-kṛitam sarvam idam, 'All that was done on my account.' 'Although her gestures appeared to be unfavourable, yet it was easy to refer them to myself.' [ātma-vishayatvāropa iti mantaryam: K.]

[East-India House, 1060; Bodleian, 233]. The Calcutta edition, without the support of any MS. in my possession, adds 'jayatu, jayatu bhavān, 'Let your majesty be victorious.' This is sufficiently implied in jāpyase, which I cannot agree in deriving from jap, 'to repeat or mutter,' but rather from the causal of ji, 'to conquer.' If referred to jap the meaning could only be 'you are caused to mutter,' which does not suit the context; whereas the sense of jāpyase, as the 2nd per. sing. pres. pass. of the causal of ji, is quite suitable, and is, moreover, agreeable to the interpretation of Kāṭavama [vijayā bhava], and to that of the Calcutta edition [jayārha 's]. Lassen considers jāpyase to be the proper Sanskrit equivalent for the Prakrit jadbhāsi, although, with Chézy, he refers it to jap [Instit. Ling. Prāk., p. 361]. Most of the Devanāgarī MSS. read jābhaissam for jiragishyāni, 'I will cause to live,' 'I will wish life,' i.e., 'I will salute you with chiran-jira, 'Long life to you!' Compare page 68, line 12.

<sup>1</sup> 'Why indeed, having yourself troubled (my) eyes, do you inquire the cause of (my) tears.' Thus explained by Śaṅkara: yathā ko'pi kaśyachin netrayor angulyādikam praveśya prichehhati bhavataś cakshushor āsru katham ādyati tathā tvam api, 'You are like a person who, after thrusting a finger, etc., into the eyes of any one, asks, How does a tear come into your eyes?' The Viśiṣhaka probably here quotes some proverb, and the king observes in the next line that he does not understand its application in the present case.

<sup>3</sup> 'When the reed imitates the character [gait] of the Kubja (plant), is that by its own power?' (or) is it not (by the force) of the current of the river.' Vetasa, a large reed or cane [calamus rotang] which grows in Indian rivers. Kubja or kubjaka, properly 'hump-backed,' but also the name for a crooked aquatic plant [trapa bi-spinosa], called also vāri-kubja and jala-kubja. Śaṅkara says it is sometimes called kuvalaya, a name usually applied to a species of water-lily. He also mentions a reading kuñja, 'an arbour,' instead of kubja. Possibly this is the reading to which the kuñja of the Devanāgarī MSS. is to be referred, as, according to Vararuchi (II. 33), khujja is the Prākṛit equivalent for kubja. There is doubtless a double-entendre in the word, but the first allusion is to the Kubja plant. In order to apprehend the full force of the Vidūshaka's pleasantry in comparing himself to an upright reed, accidentally transformed into a crooked plant, it must be remembered that his natural form was that of a lame, hump-backed man [see page 59, note 1.]

<sup>1</sup> 'By you, having thus relinquished the affairs of your kingdom, it is to be lived as a forester [lit., it is to be become with the manner of life of a forester], in a wild unfrequented region like this. Since (then) I truly am become no (longer) master of my own limbs, whose joints are shaken about by daily chases after wild beasts, therefore I will beg you as a favour to let me go just for one day to rest myself.' Amānusha-sañchāre, lit., 'untrodden by man.' Taylor MS. Sandhi-bandha or sandhi-bandhana, properly 'the ligament or tendon which binds the joints together.' Pra-sad in the causal ātán., is 'to beg a favour [prasāda] from any one.'

<sup>3</sup> 'By me a cry has been made in the wilderness,' i.e., I have spoken in vain, no one listens to me [ko'pi na śrinoti: Ch.]. This was a kind of proverbial phrase: Compare Mahābhārata, I., 3022: Aham idam śūnye raumi, kim na śrinoshi me: Also Amaruśataka, 76.

<sup>1</sup> 'Is it in eating sweetmeats (that you require my assistance)?' The Calcutta edition and my own Bombay Devanāgarī MS. read khanjīde, which might equally stand for the Sanskrit khādikāyām, but the above is the reading of the oldest MSS. Khādikāyām is given on the authority of Chandra-śekhara and the Bodleian MS. (233). According to Vārtika, I. on Pāṇini, III., 3. 108., khādikā is an admissible form.

<sup>2</sup> Lit., 'The opportunity is taken,' i.e., 'Now is a good opportunity: now is the time: I am all attention: [avadhānam kṛitam: Ch.] I have nothing else to do but to listen.' Amara gives as one of the meanings of kṣhāṇa; nirvyāpāra-sthiti or vyāpārāntara-rahita-sthiti, 'the state of having no other occupation,' i.e., 'leisure, opportunity.' The above is the reading of the oldest MS. and of Kāṭavema. Śaṅkara has gṛhītaḥ prañayaḥ, and the Devanāgarī MSS. ugṛhīta ayam janah.

<sup>3</sup> Śaṅkara quotes an aphorism of Bhārata, as follows: 'An universal monarch is to be addressed by his attendants with the title of Bhaṭṭa [Bhartā].' Bochtlingk compares Sāhitya-darpana, page 178. Kāṭavema remarks that the inferior attendants only ought to use this title; the others, śacāmin or deva.

<sup>2</sup> 'Though observed to have evil effects, the chase has proved only an advantage in (the case of) our master.' Dṛiṣṭa-doshā may perhaps be translated 'regarded as a fault.' See the end of note 5, page 71. One MS. reads adyiṣṭa-doshāpi, 'certainly hunting shows no ill-effects in our master,' etc.

The idea generally implied is that of moving or flapping backwards and forwards. Pūrva = pūrva-bhāga. Kleśa-leśair; this reading is given on the authority of Śāṅkara and the oldest East-India House MS. (No. 1060). Kāṭavema passes it over. All the others read śveda-leśair. It may be suspected that śveda was accidentally written for kheda, the synonym for kleśa. Vyāyatatvādd = kṛta-vyāyāmatvādd [Ch.], and dṛiḍhatvāt [K.] It is the state where (is) there such a recreation as this?' Medas, 'adepts or fat,' or rather sthaulya-janaka-dhātu, 'a serous secretion causing fatness.' K. It performs the same functions to the flesh that the marrow does to the bones; its proper seat is in the belly [udaram]: hence the flesh is called medas-krit, 'the maker of adepts.' Chheda = nāśa, 'destruction,' 'removal,' 'reduction.' Cf. Gharma-chheda, 'the cessation of the heat.' Vikramorvaśī, Act 4. Utthāna-yogyam; the Bengālī MSS. read utsāha-yogyam, but utsāha is merely a synonym for utthāna, which is applied to any kind of manly exertion. Kāṭavema says the word here refers especially to the act of mounting on horse-back. Sattvānām, i.e., jantūnām śinhādūnām, 'animals such as lions, etc.' It probably refers both to the hunters and the hunted. Vikṛitimat, 'affected with vikṛiti or vikāra, i.e., any emotion which causes a change from the prakṛiti, or natural and quiescent state of the mind [parityakta-prakṛitikam: K.]; See page 37, note 2. Bhaya-krodayoḥ [satoḥ] = bhaye krodhe cha. Śaṅkara explains utkarsha by pratiśṭhā, 'fame, honour.' Vyasanam: In Manu, VII., 47. 50., hunting is designated as one of the ten vices [vyasanāni] of kings, and is, moreover, included amongst the four most pernicious [kaṣṭatama].

<sup>१</sup> 'The forest has its beasts of prey tracked, why then is it staid?' i.e., Why do you delay?' The first clause follows the reading of the Devanāgarī MSS.; the second is adopted from the oldest MS. (East-India House, 1060), supported by Kātavema. Kīmiti, Cf. Hitopadeśa, line 2618; Gīta Gov., ix., 7. Grihita = jñāta, 'found out,' 'discovered.' The Bengālī MSS. insert prachāra-sūchita, 'indicated by their tracks,' after 'grihita.'

'bears seize the human nose.' The Bengálí read śrīgála-mṛiga-lolupasya, 'eager after a jackal or deer.' Richehhasa is the Prākṛit for ṛikshasya, in accordance with Vararuchi, III., 30.

1 'Let the buffaloes agitate-by-their-plunges the water of the tanks, repeatedly struck with their horns: let the herd of deer, forming groups under the shade, busy themselves in rumination; let the bruising of the Mustá grass be made in (undisturbed) confidence by the lines [herds] of boars in the pool; and let this my bow, having-the-fastening-of-its-string-loose, get repose.' Gāhantām = lodayantu, 'Let them agitate, stir:' K.: hence lulāpa is one of the names for a buffalo. Gāh is properly, 'to plunge into,' or 'plunge about in.' Nipāna = dhāva, 'a reservoir near a well [upakūpa]: Amara. Romantham = adhava-chalanam, 'The moving of the lower lip:' K. and bhuktasya punar ākrishya or ulgīrya charraṇam, 'The chewing of what has been eaten after drawing or vomiting it up again:' Ś. and Ch.: i.e., 'chewing the cud.' Abhyasyatu = paunahpunyena karotu, 'Perform again and again:' Ch. Tatibhir = yūthaiḥ, 'By herds.' The Bengálí read varāha-patibhir, 'By the chiefs of the boars.' There is no difficulty in tatibhir; many herds of animals form lines in moving from one place to another, or in grazing. Mustá, a sort of fragrant grass [Cyperus rotundus] of which swine are fond, and are hence called mustáda. Kṣhati = vidāraṇam, 'tearing, uprooting:' K.: and lanthanam, 'rolling:' Ś. The grass would probably be bruised by their trampling and rolling on it, as well as by their eating it. Śithila-jyā-bandha = avaropita-guṇa. Śankara and Chandra-śekhara observe that the above verse furnishes an example of the figure called Jāti or Svabhā-rokti, i.e., 'Description of living objects by circumstances or acts suited to their character.' They also animadvert on the somewhat unusual change of construction from the nominative to the instrumental in the third line, and its resumption in the fourth.

Wilson calls it a fabulous stone with fabulous properties, and mentions a fellow-stone called chandra-kānta, 'moon-beloved,' or chandra-maṇi, 'moon-gem.' It may be gathered from this passage that its properties resembled those of a glass lens, and it may be presumed that this instrument was not unknown to the Hindūs at the time when this play was

The following parallel sentiment is from Bhartri-Hari, II., 30 : Yad ahetano'pi pādaiḥ sprīṣṭāḥ prajvalati savitur atikāntah, tat tejasvi puruṣah para-kṛita-nikṛitaṁ katham saḥate, 'Since even the lifeless (stone) beloved of the sun, when touched by its rays, burns; how then can the man of spirit put up with an injury inflicted by another?' Abhibhava = tiraskāra, 'insult : ' K. The sun's rays, disturbing the natural state of the stone, are compared to the hunter's disturbing the hermitage and provoking its inhabitants. Vamanti : this is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS. and of Kāṭavema. The Bengālī read sparsānukūlā api sūrya-kāntās, te hyanya-tejo-bhibhavad dahanti, 'Although the sun-crystals be grateful to the touch, yet, from the influence of other heat, they burn.'

The phrase occurs again in the beginning of the 6th Act. Has makshikam here at all the sense of the French mouchard, ‘a spy,’ which is derived from mouche, ‘a fly?’

So in the Vikramorvaśī, Act 1, the King, speaking of Urvaśī, says, gasya netrayor abandhyayoh [not barren] pathi sthitā twam. The Nava-mallikā was a delicate and tender plant [atikomala-pushpa-bheda: Ch.] which, as a creeper, depended on some other tree for support; the arka was a large and vigorous one [see Sir W. Jones, vol. v., page 102]: hence the former is compared to Śakuntalā, the latter to the sage Kauwa. Śankara explains arkopari by raver upari, 'upon the sun;' but, according to Sir W. Jones, ravi may be a synonym for the swallow-wort; and Śankara himself hints that some interpret arka by arka-pushpa. Kātavema explains the first line of the verse, but dismisses the second as too clear for any remark. Sura-yuvati; see page 43, note 2. According to Kātavema, kila is used vārtayām, 'it is said,' 'it is reported;' but Śankara interprets it by nischitam, 'certainly.' Śithilam = vrintach chyutam, 'fallen from the stalk.' Ch. The correspondence of the words in the first line with those in the second is noticeable; sura-yuvati with nava-mallikā, muni with arka, apatya with kusuma, ujjhita with śithila, adhigata with chyuta.

<sup>1</sup> 'Just as to any one [lit., of any one] having lost his relish for dates, there may be a great desire for the tamarind; so is this desire of your majesty (for Śakuntalā), slighting the jewels of women in (your own) haram.' Pinda-kharjūra, 'a kind of Kharjūra, or date-tree,' here probably used for the fruit, and therefore in the neuter. Tintidikā or tintidī, 'the tamarind-tree.' Udvejita = vaimanasyam prāpita, 'brought to a change of mind or feeling.' Itthidā, itthikā and itthi are the regular Prākṛit equivalents for strī. See Lassen's Inst. Prāk., page 182, note.

<sup>1</sup> 'Was she endowed with the properties of life by the Creator after delineating her [placing her] in a picture; or was she rather formed by the mind by a concentration [assemblage, selection] of lovely forms. She appears to me like a matchless [the last] creation of the loveliest of women [or like another creation of the goddess of beauty], when I recollect [recollecting] the omnipotence of the Creator, and her (graceful) person: ' i.e., When I call to mind the divine power of Brahmá, I cannot help regarding her as some faultless picture which he has painted and endowed with breath and life; when I reflect on her sylph-like figure, I am inclined to think she must have been formed in his mind by an ideal selection of the most beautiful forms. Or, it may simply mean,—Whatever was the method of her creation, whether she was formed by the hand, by first painting a beautiful figure and then breathing into it the principle of life; or by the mind, by collecting into one ideal model a combination of various exquisite forms; it is clear that when I reflect on the omnipotence of the Creator, and upon her loveliness, I must regard her as an unequalled beauty (or, as another creation of the goddess Lakshmi). Stri-ratna is explained by Śankara and Chandra-śekhara to mean Lakshmi; but it may be better to refer it to the antepura-stri-ratna mentioned before, as aparā = apūrvā, 'matchless,' 'peerless,' 'without a fellow;' na vidyate parā: K. and Ś. Chitre = ālekhya. Nireśya = vinasya, 'having placed, fixed, committed.' Parikalpita = sampādita, or sampanna, 'endowed with,' 'provided with: ' K. Yoga, at the end of a compound, is used somewhat vaguely; sattva-yoga may mean 'a combination of the various properties of being and life.' Kāṭavama observes that, 'as an object is lovely, so is it capable of being represented in a picture,' and refers to the verse in the 6th Act, beginning Yadyat sādhu na chitre syāt. This, he says, is tantamount to asserting that the figure of Śakuntalā was faultless. Rupoच्चया

— chandrady-upamāna-vastu-samucchaya, i.e., 'collecting together such models of beauty as the moon, etc., for the purpose of forming one ideal perfect form, by a selection from each : K. Manasā kri, or kalp, 'to form by means of the mind;' hence often simply, 'to imagine;' and hence, mano-kalpita, 'an idea.' There may be an allusion here to the mind-born sons of Brahmā. Vidhinā = vidhātṛā. Kāṭavema observes that, 'being dissatisfied with the thought contained in the first line, he asserts in the second that her limbs were too delicate to have been fashioned by the hand in a picture; they must, therefore, have been formed in the mind.' Stri-ratna = stri-śreshṭha : Ch. Jātau jātau yad utkrishṭam taddhi ratnam prachakshate, 'whatever is best of its kind that indeed they call ratna, 'a gem:' Ch. The connection of anuchintya with the dative case me is unusual, but not without precedent. The Bengāl MSS. read chitte for chitre.

<sup>1</sup> 'The supplanter.' The verb praty-ū-diś = nirākṛi, i.e., 'to reject,' 'remove,' 'set aside,' and pratyādeśa, 'rejection,' is here used for 'the cause of rejection;' i.e., anything which, by its superiority, supplants and brings into contempt what was before highly prized. Tayā nija-saundarya-mahimnā nya-rūpavati-rūpam khanditam : Ś. So also, in the beginning of the Vikramorvaśi, Urvaśi is called 'pratyādeśo rūpa-garvitīyā śri-gauryaḥ.'

<sup>2</sup> 'This faultless form (is) like a flower not (yet) smelt, a tender-shoot unplucked [uncut, unhurt] by the nails, an unperforated jewel, fresh honey whose flavour (is yet) untasted, and the full [unalloyed] reward of meritorious deeds. I know not to what possessor [enjoyer] here [of this form] Destiny will resort;' i.e., I know not whom Destiny intends to be the enjoyer of her beauty. Alūnam, i.e., śdkhāvasthitam, 'Still remaining on the branch.'

Andviddham = asamutkirnam, 'unperforated.' K. Cf. Raghu-vansa, i, 4, where he speaks of manau vajra-samutkirne sūtrasya gatih, 'the entrance of a thread into a gem perforated by the adamant.' The Bengālī MSS. read anātmuktam = aparīhitam, ākarād ānita māttram, 'not yet put on, only just drawn from the mine.' Ś. Phalam punyānām, i.e., 'the fruit of many virtuous acts in various former births come to its maturity' (parīṇati-bhūtam): Ś. Akhaṇḍa = sampūrṇa, 'unimpaired,' 'entire.' The consequences of good deeds performed in former births is sometimes mixed with evil; but, in this comparison, it is said to be unalloyed: hence the form of Śakuntalā is called anagham, 'faultless,' i.e., pratyaśāya-hetu-rahitam: K. Iha, i.e., asmin rūpa-vishaye, 'with reference to this form.' K. Samupasthāsyati = samprāpsyati, 'will attain,' 'arrive at.' This verse affords an example of the figure called 'Rūpaka,' i.e., A description of one object under the form of another, animate or inanimate, which it is poetically supposed to resemble. There are various modifications of this figure.

<sup>1</sup> 'Therefore let your highness quickly rescue her, lest she fall into the hands of some devout-rustic, whose head is greasy with the oil of Ingudi.' See page 18, note 1. Mā = yathā na: K.

<sup>2</sup> 'Towards your honour what kind of feeling (was displayed) by her eyes?' Atha is used in asking a question: Ś. Bhavantam antareṇa = bhavan-nimittam: Ch.: = bhavan-madhye: Ś. The same expression occurs in the third Act of the Vikramorvaśī, where the interpretation given is, bhavantam uddīśya, i.e., 'towards or with regard to you.' Antareṇa is similarly used in the Mālavikāgn. page 5, line 3. It governs an accusative case, by Pāṇini II., 3, 4. Drishṭi-rāga = chakshuh-prīti, 'the love of the eyes.' K. The above is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS., supported by K. and Ś.; but the Bengālī read chitta-rāga.

According to Kāṭavema it is here equivalent to sannaddho, 'equipped,' 'prepared,' i.e., for rambling in the precincts of the hermitage in quest of Sakuntalā. The Vidūshaka is characteristically anxious about the provisions.

<sup>2</sup> According to Manu (vii., 131-133) a king might take a sixth part of liquids, flowers, roots, fruit, grass, etc.; but, even though dying with want, he was not to receive any tax from a Brāhmaṇ learned in the Vedas.

<sup>1</sup> 'These hermits pay another (kind of) tribute, which, leaving behind heaps of jewels, is welcomed [rejoiced in]:' i.e., which is welcomed more than heaps of jewels. This is the reading of the oldest Bengálí MSS., and seems preferable to that of the Devanágari anyad bhágadheyam eteshám rakshane nipatati, 'another tribute accrues (to me) for their protection.' According to Amara (II., VIII., 1. 27) bhágadheya in this sense is masculine. Śankara and some of the Bengálí have punya for anya.

<sup>2</sup> 'That tribute which arises to kings from the (four) classes is perishable; but hermits [inhabitants of the woods] offer us a sixth part of (the merit of their) penance, (which is) imperishable.' Varnebhyah, 'the four classes of Bráhmans, Kshatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śúdras:' K., Ś., and Ch. Hence it would appear that the Bráhmans were liable to some kind of tribute as well as the other classes, though it is clear from Manu that they were in most cases exempt. The Bengálí have dhanam for phalam. Dadati; the third conjugation rejects the nasal in the third person plural.

<sup>2</sup> 'Oh! the confidence (inspired by the sight) of his person, majestic though (it be)! But this is quite natural in this king (who) is very little inferior to a Rishi.' Diṭṭimat = tejaswin, 'splendid,' hence 'majestic.' Vīśvasanhyata, 'the state of being confided in.' Upapanna, 'fit,' 'proper,' 'agreable to reason.' Cf. Vikramorvaśī, Act 2, upapannam viśeshanam asya vādyoh. Rīshi-kalpe, 'resembling a Rishi, but with a degree of inferiority,' such is the force of kalpa in composition. Dushyanta was a Rājarshi, and therefore one degree below a Rishi : See page 43, note 2, in the middle; and page 38, note 3. The Devanāgarī reading is ṛishibhyo nātibhinne rājani, but the Bengālī is here preferable.

It is difficult to see how this last sense can apply. Rakshá-yogdā : See p. 79, line 2. Cf. Manu, vii., 144. 'The highest virtue of a king is the protection of his subjects.' Chārana-dvandva = gandharbamiṭhuna, 'pair of Gandharbas, or celestial choristers.' These beings were the musicians or minstrels of Indra's heaven, just as the Apsaras were the dancers and actresses : and their business was to amuse the inhabitants of Swarga by singing the praises of gods, saints and heroes. Chārana is any bard or herald. According to Kāṭavema kevalam = eva, 'certainly.' This verse affords an example of the figure called 'Vyatireka,' i.e., A description of the difference of two things compared in some respects to each other : Ś.

<sup>1</sup> 'The friend of Indra.' Bala-bhit, 'Indra' who crushes armies with his thunder-bolt. Sakhi at the end of a compound (like rātri, akshi, etc.) changes its final to a, and becomes a noun of the first class. Pān. V., 4, 87, 91, 98, 102. Indra is the chief of the Suras or secondary gods, being inferior to the gods of the Triad; and corresponds to the Jove or Jupiter Tonans of classical mythology. In his lordship over Swarga, or paradise, he might be supplanted by any one who could perform a hundred Áśva-medhas or horse-sacrifices : see p. 44, note 1. He and the other Suras were for ever engaged in hostilities with their half-brothers, the demons called Asuras or Daityas, the giants or Titans of Hindú mythology, who were the children of Kasyapa by Diti, as the Suras were by Aditi : see p. 22, note 1. On such occasions the gods seem to have depended much upon the assistance they received from the heroes of the earth, such as Dushyanta, Purúravas, etc.

<sup>1</sup> 'This is not wonderful, that he whose arm is as long as the bar of a city (gate), should alone govern the entire earth, having the ocean as its dark [green] boundary [i.e., as far as the very ocean]. The gods, rooted in their enmity with the demons, in their battles expect victory through [in] his strung bow and the thunderbolt of Indra.' Parigha = argala, 'the bar or bolt which fastens a gate.' In a city-gate it was both massive and long (stydna dirgha: Ch.) and therefore an object of comparison highly significant of muscular strength. It should be borne in mind that length and vigour of arm were prime requisites in the ancient hero, whose fame depended on the ease with which he managed his bow. Hence the appositeness of such epithets as mahā-bāhu and prāṇsu-bāhu, 'long-armed.' Bhūnakti = pālayati: Ch. Bhuj, applied to a king in the sense of ruling and protecting the earth, is common. Cf. kṛtsnām prithivīm bhunkte. Manu, vii., 148. Raghu., viii., 7; iii., 4. Āsānsante = icchkhanti, 'wish for,' 'hope for:' in this sense ā-sans is conjugated in the ātm. Samitishu surāḥ, etc.: this is the Bengālī reading; the Devanāgarī have sura-yuvatayo baddha-vairā, etc. Daityair, See the last note. Adhijye; see page 8, note 4. The loc. c. has sometimes the force of the instrumental. Pauru-hūta = Aindra, 'belonging to Indra:' Puru-hūta, 'much-worshipped' is one of Indra's thousand names. This verse is an example of the figure called 'Dīpaka' or 'illustration:' Ś.: its use is to throw light, as it were, upon an idea by some apposite illustration.

<sup>2</sup> 'At first it was overflowing; (but) now, by the account of the Rākshasas, not even a drop is left:' this is the reading of the Devanāgarī MSS., supported by K. Parivāha is either 'an inundation,' or 'a channel for carrying off an excess of water:' the Bengālī have aparibādham, 'unchecked.' Vṛitāntena = nāma-grahanena, 'by the mention.'

<sup>3</sup> 'I shall indeed then be protected [am protected] by thy discus': so reads the oldest MS., supported by Ś. and Ch.; the Devanāgarī have esa rakṣha-sādo rakṣhidomhi, 'I am protected from the Rākshasa.' The chakra is the discus or circular missile weapon of Viṣṇu, and often employed by him against the demons, as he is their great enemy; whence his titles 'Daityāri,' 'Asura-śatru': the attribution of this weapon to Dushyanta by the Vidūshaka is probably meant as a humorous compliment.

but Ch. substitutes pālana, and interprets the phrase by pura-deha-pushti-prada: Ś. gives the same interpretation, but reads paryupāsana for pālana: 'Pinda, deha-mātre iti Medini,' 'According to Medinī pinda has the sense of body': Ś. and Ch.: and this sense is given by Wilson. Putra refers to the king in his relation to the queen-mother. The Devanāgarī reading of this passage [pravṛitta-pārāṇa upavāsa, 'a fast which has come to an end.'] is not very satisfactory. Upavāsa = vrata, 'a religious ceremonial accompanied with fasting, but not necessarily a fast': K. and Ch. observe that one name for this ceremonial was putra-rāja, and that it consisted in offering various presents to the young king of sweetmeats, clothes, etc., just as might be done in the present day on the occasion of a birth-day. Dirghāyushā: See page 8, note 2. Vayam is used by the same rule that the plural devindm is employed above. Sambhāvayitavyā: See page 25, note 1, at end.

<sup>1</sup> 'In this direction the business of the hermits, in the other the command of a venerable hermit (calls me). Both are not to be neglected. How, in such a case, can an arrangement be effected?' Dwayam api, 'both the one and the other': api is often affixed to dwau in this sense: See Amara, II., 1, 5; Mālavik., page 16, line 22: In Hitop., line 2048, dwayam without api has the sense of 'both.'

<sup>2</sup> 'Stand in the middle, like Trisanku.' The story of this monarch is told at length in the Rāmāyana, I., LVII. to LX. [see also page 42, note 1, of this book]. He is there described as a just and pious prince of the solar race, who aspired to celebrate a great sacrifice, hoping thereby to ascend to heaven in his mortal body. He first requested the sage Vasiṣṭha to officiate for him; but, being refused, he then applied to the sage's hundred sons, by whom he was cursed and degraded to the condition of a Chāṇḍāla. In this pitiable state he had recourse to Viśvāmitra, who undertook to conduct the sacrifice, and invited all the gods to be present; they, however, refused to attend. Upon this the enraged Viśwámitra, by his own power, transported Trisanku to the skies, whither he had no sooner arrived than he was hurled down again, head-foremost, by Indra and the gods; but, being arrested in his downward course by Viśwámitra, remained suspended between heaven and earth, forming a constellation in the southern hemisphere. The story is differently told in some of the Purāṇas [Wilson's translation of the Vishṇu-P., page 371, note.] They and the Hari-vanśa describe Trisanku as a wicked prince, guilty of three heinous sins [sanku]. Śankara adopts this view of his character, and calls him Kṛita-bahutara-malina-karmā rājā. Antarā = tapovana-sva-nagarayor madhye, 'between the hermitage and the city.' The facetious allusion to Trisanku is quite characteristic of the Vidūshaka and affords an example of the 'Vyāhāra alankāra:' Ś. and Ch.

From the difference of the places of the two duties [i.e., on account of the distance between the place where the two duties have to be performed] my mind is divided in two, as the stream of a river driven back [made to recoil] by rocks (lying) before it.' Purāṇ = agṛe, 'in front,' 'ahead.' Pratihatam śaile, 'which has struck on a rock,' is the reading of the Bengālī MS. [Bodleian, 233] and of all the Devanāgarī: the other Bengālī and Śankara read śailaiḥ, which I think preferable: Compare the sentiment at page 58. Srotovaham = nadi-sambandhi, 'belonging to a srotovahā or river,' [K., Ś., and Ch.] and is therefore an adjective agreeing with srotah: the Devanāgarī read srotovaho, genitive case of a substantive, srotovah: Wilson gives only srotovahā, but has the adjective. The above furnishes an example of the 'Yathopamā alankāra,' or comparison by the use of the conjunction yathā."

<sup>1</sup> 'The pupil of the sacrificing-(brāhmaṇ) bearing kuśa-grass.' Yajamāna is for yajvan, 'a sacrificer.' See Raghu-v., xviii., 11 : In Telugu it has acquired the sense of 'master.' Compare tatah praviśato Bharata-śiṣya : Vikram., Act 3. Dr. B. reads yajamānah śiṣyah on the authority of only one MS. The translation must then be 'a pupil occupied about a sacrifice.' The pupil, or religious student, certainly, did not officiate himself. Śiṣhya, in fact, denotes a Brahmachāri, or young brāhmaṇ in that state of pupilage through which every brāhmaṇ had to pass, living in the house of some superior brāhmaṇ, who was his preceptor; and who, in return for instruction given, required his assistance in various menial offices, in collecting the materials for sacrifice, and in asking alms. 'Let the student carry water-pots, flowers, cow-dung, fresh earth and kuśa-grass, as much as may be useful to his preceptor; let him bring wood for the oblation to fire; let him go begging through the whole district,' etc. Manu, ii., 176 et seq. Kuśān : see page 18, note 1.

<sup>2</sup> 'Since on his highness having merely entered the hermitage, our rites have become free from molestation.' So read the oldest MSS. supported by K. The others praviṣṭa evāśramam tatrābhavati, etc. The student need hardly be reminded that praviṣṭa-mātre, etc. is in the loc. case absolute.

antareṇa: Ś.) in the same manner as a threatening roar often suffices to scare those who hear it. Cf. Pratiśabdo hi harer hinasti nāgān. Vikram. Act I. Hunkāra is the roar of any fierce animal. The figure by which the sound of the bow is thus designated is called Utprekshā, or hyperbolic comparison: Ś. and Ch. So Bhaṭṭi (x., 44) in giving an example of this figure, describes a mountain as stretching out its huge body between heaven and earth to protect the land from the inroads of the sea.

Manu, iv., 57; ii., 143.

<sup>3</sup> 'In the air,' i.e. speaking in the air. This is an example of ākūśa-bhāṣhitam or ākūśa-vākyaṃ, which is defined by Śāṅkara to be dūra-sthā-bhāṣhanam, 'speech at a distance,' or aśarīram nivedanam, 'bodiless statement,' and by Kāṭavema as apraśīṭaiḥ saha dīpāḥ, 'conversation with (characters) not on the stage.' It is, in fact, a speech addressed to some person outside or off the stage, the actor at the same time fixing his eyes in the air, or on some object only visible to himself. Hence in Kāṭavema ākāśe is followed by the words lakṣam or lakṣhyaṃ baddhvā, 'fixing his gaze.' Cf. Ākūśa-baddha-lakṣaḥ. Vikram. Act 4, and Mudrā-rākṣh., p. 6, l. 19; p. 31, l. 3. The answer which is supposed to be given is also ākūśa-bhāṣhitam, and is not heard by the audience. The actor on the stage pretending to listen (śrutim abhīntya) repeats the imaginary reply, always introducing it with the words, kim bravīṣi: Śāhit.-darp., p. 177, at end.

<sup>4</sup> 'For whom are brought this uśtra-ointment and lotus-leaves, with fibres attached?' Uśtra = virāṇa-kanda, the root of virāṇa, a fragrant grass [Andropogon muricatum] with which a cooling ointment was made. Nalinī is used for lotus as well as nalina, but rather denotes the entire plant: See page 24, note 4. Mṛṇṇīla = viśa, 'the fibres of the stalk of the lotus.'

<sup>३</sup> The Vishkambha or Vishkambhaka, according to the Sāhitya-darpana (p. 146), and Kāṭavema's commentary on the opening speech of the 2nd. Act of this play, is an introductory monologue or dialogue, so called from its concisely compressing [root skumbh with vi] into a short space an account of those subordinate parts of the plot, which are not enacted before the audience, but are to be taken for granted as having happened before the Act, or as about to happen after it; and a knowledge of which is essential to the comprehending of the action of the remainder of the play: [Vṛitta-vartishyamānānām kathāśāśānām nidarśakah, sankshiptārthastu vishkambhak: See also page 62, note 3 at end.] In the case of a monologue, it may be suspected that these terms may be identified with the speaker, but when more than one actor is concerned, the direction at the end [nishkrāntau, vishkambhakah] would seem to indicate that the term belongs to the dialogue itself, and not to the speaker of it. The Vishkambha may occur at the beginning of any of the Acts, even of the 1st. immediately after the Prastāvanā [ādāv ankasya darśitah]. It may be spoken by two out of the three sets of characters into which the dramatis-personæ of an Indian play are divided, viz., the inferior [nīcha] who speak Prākṛit anuddāttoktyā 'in the low tone'; and the middling [madhya, madhyama] who speak Sanskrit udāttoktyā 'in the high tone'; but not by the chief [pradhāna], such as the hero, etc. Again, it may be spoken by one character in the form of a soliloquy, or by two in the form of a dialogue; and either by characters of the middle class only, when it is called Śuddha, i.e., puro; or by those of the middle and lower combined, when it is called Mīśra or Sankīrṇa, i.e., mixed: [Madhyena madhyamābhyām vā pātrābhyām samprayojitah śuddhah syāt tu sankīrṇo nīcha-madhyama-kalpitaḥ]. Sometimes the characters are exclusively those of the inferior class, who speak Prākṛit; sometimes more than two appear on the stage at once, in which cases it is properly called Praveśaka. It must, however, be borne in mind that the terms Praveśaka and Vishkambhaka are regarded as identical by the MSS. and Commentators [Vishkambha eva sanyaktaiḥ praveśaka iti smṛitah: K. praveśaka eva vishkambhakah: Ś.]; although the Sāhitya-darpaṇa restricts the former title to the cases above specified, and limits it still further by applying it to an interlude only [Praveśako anuddāttoktyā nīcha-pātra-prayojitah, anka-dvayāntar vijneyah śesham vishkambhake yathā]. There can be little doubt, too, that the term Praveśaka, like Vishkambhaka, may be sometimes applied to the speaker in the case of a monologue. From the circumstance that the opening speech in the 2nd. Act of this play is called a Praveśaka by K. (unsupported, however, by the MSS.), we may infer that the speaker was not obliged to leave the stage at the end of the scene. It is possible, however, that he might have withdrawn and re-entered, as in the 5th. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, where the opening soliloquy is styled Praveśaka both in the MSS. and in the Calcutta edition. Doubtless, this title may with as much reason be applied to the Vidūshaka's soliloquy in the one play, as in the other. According to the rule thus propounded by the Śāhit-darp., the present monologue is a Śuddha-Vishkambha. In the Bengālī MSS. it is termed a Praveśaka. Dr. Boehtlingk justly remarks that the modern epithet Śuddha should be omitted in the text.

॥ तृतीयो ऽङ्कः ॥

॥ ततः प्रविशति समदनावस्थो राजा ॥

राजा ॥ सचिन्तं निःश्वस्य ॥

made of sugar-cane, the string consisting of bees, and with five arrows, [whence his name Pancha-vāṇa] each tipped with the blossom of a flower, which pierce the heart through the five senses. The names of the five arrows (according to Bharata, cited by Ś.) are—1. Harshaṇa, 'Gladdener;' 2. Prahasana, 'Exhilarater;' 3. Mohana, 'Fascinator;' 4. Mūrchehkhana, 'Sense-destroyer;' 5. Vikarshaṇa, 'Distracter.' According to Kāṭavema, the names of the five flowers which form the points of these arrows, and which may be supposed to possess properties similar to that implied in the names of the arrows themselves, are—1. the Aravinda, a kind of lotus [Nymphæa Nelumbo]; 2. the Aśoka; 3. the Śirisha; 4. the Chūta or Āmra, i.e., the Mango; 5. the Utpala or blue lotus. But according to Sir W. Jones [Hymn to Kāmadeva, vol. xiii., p. 239] they are—1. the Champaka; 2. the Chūta or Āmra; 3. the Keśara or Nāga-keśara; 4. the Ketaka; 5. the Vilwa or Bela. In both lists the Chūta occurs, and is considered the favourite arrow of the god: hence the frequent allusions to it in the Gīta-govinda (iii., 12; iv., 6), and hence in Act VI its epithet pañcābhyaṅhika 'chief of the five.' This epithet is explained by Śankara to mean 'a sixth arrow, in addition to the five,' which interpretation is more in accordance with the passage in the 2nd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, kimda upavana-sahakṛair, etc. It is clear that some authorities do not include the Mango in the list. The Gīta-govinda (x., 14) mentions five other flowers as occasionally employed by the god, viz., the Badhūka, the Madhūka, the blue Lotus, the Tila, and the Kuṇḍa. Another account includes the Mallikā or jasmīn amongst the five; so that it is difficult to fix the names with any certainty. In Hindū erotic poetry, cooling properties are always attributed to the rays of the moon, which are said to distil nectar; hence some of his names—śīta-mayūkha, hima-raśmi, hima-kara, amṛita-sū, sudhā-nidhi, etc. On the other hand, the heating effect of these rays on the lover is often alluded to, thus, śītāśus tapanah: Gīt.-Gov. ix., 10; iv., 7; v. 3: Compare in the Vikramorvaśī, nandana-vana-vāṭāḥ śikhina iva [Act 2]; and pādas te śaśinah sukhayanti, etc. [end of Act iii.] Sārtha = samūha; properly, a caravan: Hitopadeśa, l. 2574. Ayathartham = viparīta-kriyam, 'having a contrary effect.' Dvayam: see p. 91, note 1. Garbhair: see p. 17, l. 8. Vajra-sāri: see p. 13, l. 4.

<sup>1</sup> 'Verily, e'en now the fire of Śiva's wrath burns in thee like the submarine fire in the ocean : otherwise how couldst thou, O agitator of the soul ! with nothing left but ashes, be so scorching towards such as me?' The story of the incineration of Kāmadeva by a beam of fire darted from the central eye of Śiva is thus told in the Rāmāyana (I, xxv., 10). "Kandarpa, whom the wise call Kāma (Cupid), had formerly a body. He once approached Śiva, the husband of Umā (Parvatī), soon after his marriage, that he might influence him with love for his wife. Śiva happened then to be practising austerities, and intent on a vow of chastity. He therefore cursed the god of love in a terrible voice, and at the same time a flash from his terrific eye caused all the limbs of his body to shrivel into ashes. Thus Cupid was made incorporeal [whence, as some say, is his power over the minds of men] by the anger of the great god, and from that time has been called Ananga, 'the bodiless one.' " Aurva, 'submarine fire,' called badava or bādava, and personified as the son of the saint Urva. The fable is told in the Hari-vanśa (ch. xlv.), and is noticed in Troyer's Rāja-taranginī (iii., 170). The Rishi Urva, who had gained great power by his austerities, was pressed by the gods and others to beget children that he might perpetuate his race. He consented, but warned them that his offspring would consume the world. Accordingly, he created from his thigh a devouring fire, which as soon as it was produced, demanded nourishment, and would have destroyed the whole earth, had not Brahmā appeared and assigned the ocean as its habitation, and the waves as its food. The spot where it entered the sea was called Badavā-mukha, 'the mare's mouth.' Doubtless the story was invented to suit the phenomenon of some marine jwāld-mukhi or volcano, which probably exhaled through the water bituminous inflammable gas, and which, perhaps in the form of a horse's mouth, was at times visible above the sea. Langlois, conjecturally, places the position of it on the coast north of Malabar.

Verse 56. UPAJĀTI OR ĀKHYĀNAKĪ (variety of TRISHṬUBH), each half-line being either INDRA-VAJRĀ OR UPENDRA-VAJRĀ, the former only differing from the latter in the length of the first syllable. See Verse 41.

<sup>1</sup> 'Nevertheless, the fish-bannered (god) even though incessantly bringing mental anguish, (will be) acceptable to me, if employing (as the subject about which he inflicts pain) that (maiden) with long intoxicating eyes he so strike (me).' Makara-ketu, a name of Cupid, is derived from the makara, or marine monster, subdued by him, which was painted on his banner [ketu]. 'By the mention of this title, his invincibleness is indicated:' Ś. Adhikṛitya = uddiśya, 'with reference to:' Ś. and Ch. : See page 5, note 1; and p. 76, note 3, also Raghu-v. xi., 62, śāntim adhikṛitya anvaṇukta.

Is it becoming of you, drawing your bow to your very ear, (to) discharge (your) arrows even upon me (your votary)?' Vows were to the bodiless god of love, what the oblations (upon which they were supposed to feed and fatten) were to the other gods. Sankalpa = ichehhd, 'wish.' Śravanopakaṇṭhe ākṛishya = karnāntikam āniya, 'drawing the string of the bow back as far as the ear.' Upakaṇṭha, 'near,' lit., 'near the neck;' Cf. Raghu-v., ix., 57, ākarna-kṛiṣṭam rāṇam. Yukta = uchita. The passage from Bhagavan Kāmadeva (page 100) to rāṇa-mokṣha is given on the authority of the Taylor and my own Bombay Devanāgarī MS., supported by Śankara and Chandra-śekhara, and by all the Bengālī MSS. The Mackenzie MS. has part of the passage, but Colebrooke's omits it altogether.

The weight of the hips of a beautiful female is a favourite subject of allusion. Compare Paśchān-natā guru-nitambatayā asyāḥ paḍa-panktiḥ: Vikram., Act 4: and Śrōṇi-bhārād alasa-gamanā: Megh., verse 81. Hence one of the names of a lovely woman is nitambinī, 'having large and handsome hips and loins.' Chézy compares the epithet 'Callipygo' applied to a celebrated statue of Venus.

Two other names for this plant are jalāsaya, 'growing in water,' and avadāha, 'allaying fever;' the slender fibres of it are now known by the name of Khaskhas and are used in India in trellises for cooling the air. Prasithila = adrīḍha: Ś. = komala, 'withered:' Ch. The repetition of kshāma may imply 'becoming gradually every day more and more emaciated;' as Priyamvadā had said anudivasam parihiyase anguih. Kāthinya-mukta: the Bengālī have yukta, but the loss of firmness in the breasts would rather be a sign of debility. Prakāma: Ś. interprets this by atyartham, 'excessively.' So the commentator on Gīt.-Gov., iv., 17; vii., 40, explains nikāmam by atiśayena. Similarly kāmam has the sense of nīśchitam, 'certainly.' Ś. According to Kāṭavema tapātyaye = grishmānte, 'at the end of the hot season.' He and Śāṅkara observe that a cloudy day at the end of the hot season and at the approach of the rains, is very sultry, until by the rising of clouds it brings coolness in place of the heat which itself had caused: and quote a parallel passage from the Ratnāvalī [p. 64] Tapati prāvṛishi nitarām abhyarna-jalāgamo divasaḥ, 'In the rainy season when the rain is near at hand the day is especially hot.' Some of the Devanāgarī read ardha-syāma, 'half-obscured,' which is not supported by any of the commentators, nor by the oldest MSS.

Oblations to the manes of the deceased were offered by the nearest surviving relations soon after death, and were repeated once, or, according to some, twice in every year. They were supposed to be necessary to secure the residence of the souls of the dead in the world appropriated to the manes. The ceremony itself was called Śrāddha, and generally consisted in offering a cake made of rice and milk [pinda-nirvāpana]; or in pouring out water [udaka-dāna, udaka-kriyā]; or water and sesamum-seed mixed. In the latter case it was called tilodaka-dāna, tila-tarṇa, etc. The ceremony as performed by Brāhmanas is described in Manu, iii., 203, etc.; see especially iii., 223: Dattvā sapavitram tilodakam, 'Having poured out water with sesamum-seed and kuśa-grass.' Kātavema refers in illustration to a verse towards the end of the 6th. Act of this play, where Dushyanta says Nūnam prasūti-vikalena mayā prasiktam, dhautāsru-śesham udakam pitarah pivanti, 'In all probability my (deceased) ancestors are (now) drinking the only offering-of-water that is left to them (consisting of) glistening tears poured forth by me destitute of posterity.' Sinchatam = nirvapatam : K. Vartethām ; vrit may have the sense of 'to behave,' 'to act.'

<sup>2</sup> 'She is far gone in love, and unable to bear loss of time,' i.e., Her love has reached that point which brooks no delay. Compare dūrartūho 'syāh pranayah : Vikramorvaśī, Act 4., at beginning. Vammaha or bammaha is the proper Prākṛit equivalent for manmatha, according to Vararuchi ii., 38; iii., 43. Lassen, Instit. Prāk., p. 245, although the MSS. give mammaha.

<sup>1</sup> 'Where should a great river end its course excepting at the ocean? What (tree) excepting the Sahakāra [Mango] can support the Atimukta [Mādhavī creeper] with (its) new sprouts?' Ava-trī (properly 'to descend,' or 'alight') is here applied to the disemboguing of a river into the ocean. Yathā mahā-nadī samudram praviśati, tathā rūpavātī twam Dushyante evānuraktā: Ś. The Sahakāra is described p. 27, note 3. The Atimukta is the same as the Mādhavī or vernal creeper, called also Vāsantī and Pundraka, and noticed before: p. 109, note 1. 'The beauty and fragrance of the flower of this creeper give them a title to all the praises which Kālidās and Jayadeva bestow on them. It is a gigantic and luxuriant climber; but when it meets with nothing to grasp, it assumes the form of a sturdy tree, the highest branches of which display, however, in the air, their natural flexibility and inclination to climb:' Sir W. Jones, vol. v., p. 124.

<sup>2</sup> 'Why need we wonder at this, since the constellation Viśākhā courts [goes after] the young-moon?' i.e., If the constellation Viśākhā [or the sixteenth lunar asterism, which is sometimes written in the dual Viśākhe, as containing two stars] is eager for an union with the Moon, why need we wonder at Sakuntalá's desire to be united with a prince of the lunar race? Śásánka-lekhá is properly 'a digit of the moon,' or the moon in its most beautiful form when quite young. A complete revolution of the moon, with respect to the stars, being made in twenty-seven days, odd hours; the Hindús divide the heavens into twenty-seven constellations [asterisms] or lunar stations, one of which receives the moon for one day in each of his monthly journeys. As the Moon [Chandra] is considered to be a masculine deity, the Hindús fable these twenty-seven constellations as his wives, and personify them as the daughters of Daksha. Of these twenty-seven wives (twelve of whom give names to the twelve months) Chandra is supposed to show the greatest affection for the fourth (Rohini) but each of the others, and amongst them Viśákhá, is represented as jealous of this partiality, and eager to secure the Moon's favour for herself. Dushyanta probably means to compare himself to the Moon (he being of the lunar race: p. 14, note 2) and Śakuntalá to Viśákhá. The selection of Viśákhá, rather than Rohini, may perhaps be explained by a reference to p. 5, l. 1, where we learn that the summer-season had barely set in at the period when the events of the drama were supposed to be taking place. If therefore the season corresponded to the middle of May, the month would probably be Vaiśákha, and Viśákhá would, therefore, be appropriately chosen before Rohini. This passage may also be interpreted, but not so consistently with the fable, by referring viśákhe to the two female friends, and śásánka-lekhá to Śakuntalá. The meaning would then be, 'It is not to be wondered at that these two friends should follow Śakuntalá and assist in carrying out her schemes, any more than that the two stars of Viśákhá should go after the young moon.' Anuvartate = anusratah: K.

The same word occurs at the end of this act, where allusion is made to the flowery couch of Śakuntalā, śarīra-lulitā, ‘which her body had pressed:’ One sense of the root lul is certainly to ‘adhere,’ ‘stick,’ ‘cleave:’ The Devanāgarī all have anabhilulita with the same meaning, unsupported by K. and the other scholiasts, and the oldest Bengālī MSS. Through emaciation and disuse of the bow (Cf. p. 70, l. 7, with p. 68, l. 1) the callosities on the fore-arm usually caused by the bow-string, were not sufficiently prominent to prevent the bracelet from slipping down from the wrist to the elbow, when the arm was raised to support the head. This is a favourite idea with Kālidāsa to express the attenuation caused by love. Compare Megha-dūta, verso 2: Kanaka-valaya-bhraṇṣa-rikta-prakoṣṭhah,

‘having the fore-arm bare by the falling of the golden bracelet.’ The Bengálí have anatilulita-jyá ghátámkád, agreeing with mani-bandhanát, which would appear at first sight to be the better reading. I have followed Kátavema and the Devanágari MSS. in making this compound agree with valayam, and I believe there is no other way of translating it satisfactorily. It may, however, as Kátavema observes, be taken adverbially. Mani-bandhana ‘the wrist,’ ‘the place of binding jewels.’

² ‘This very injunction [suggestion] of my friend is weighed (in my mind),’ i.e. I must consider before I can consent to it. This is the reading of the two oldest MSS. One, however, has sahi for sahí.

² 'That very one, O timid one, from whom thou apprehendest a refusal, stands pining for an union with thee. The lover may or may not win Fortune, (but) how, being beloved (by her), should he be difficult-to-be-won by Fortune?' Śrī = Lakṣmī, 'the goddess of beauty and fortune,' here identified with Śakuntalā or with the object of the lover's hopes and aspirations. The commentators do not throw light on this passage. The meaning seems to be, 'There is always a doubt whether the suitor will gain favour with Fortune, or with the beautiful maiden who may be the object of his love, but when it is certain that he is beloved by her, how can she have any difficulty in gaining him? for there surely will be no doubt of his being willing to accept her favours, however uncertain may be her encouragement of his advances.' The verse which follows this in the Bengālī MSS. is omitted in all the Devanāgarī, and is most probably spurious.

chitena, and the Calcutta edition pulakānchitena, meaning the same. Horripilation, or the erection of the hair of the body (pulaka, roma-kantaka, romānchana) is considered by the Hindús to be an indication of exquisite delight or pleasurable emotion. The Dictionary does not give this sense to kantaka, but it is so used in Vikramorvaśi, Act I., mama angam sa-roma-kantakam ankuritam.

¹ 'But the writing-materials indeed are not at hand.' Most of the MSS. have hu for Sanskrit khalu. Lassen (Instit. Prāk., p. 192) shows that kkhu is the proper form after a short vowel.

The Prākṛit is answerable for nikshipta-varnam kuru. This is the reading of all the Devanāgarī; the Bengālī have padachheda-bhaktiyā nakhair dlikhyatām.

¹ 'But affection for my friend prompts me to be the speaker of something superfluous' i.e., of what has been so often repeated as to be already sufficiently well-known. Punar-ukta which properly means 'said again,' 'said twice,' 'frequently repeated,' has in dramatic composition, acquired the acceptance of 'notorious,' 'well-known,' and hence 'superfluous,' 'unnecessary,' 'over and above what is wanted;' and hence sometimes simply 'additional.' Thus in the Vikramorvasī, Act 3. the torches are said to be punar-uktāḥ chandrikāyām, 'rendered superfluous in the moonlight;' and in Act 5. of that play, tears dropping from the eyes on the breast are said to cause muktāvalī-virachanam punar-uktam, 'the formation of a superfluous [additional] necklace of pearls.' The Devanāgarī MSS. read samudra-vasand, 'clothed in the ocean,' 'having the ocean for its garments' [samudra eva vastrāṇi yasyāḥ: Ś.] The Bengālī all have samudra-rasand, which is literally 'sea-girt' [rasana = mekhala] and seems to be the better reading. Compare Hitop., i. 2542. Confusion between rasand and vasand may easily have arisen. Cha cha: see page 13, note 1.

which-remove languor? or placing thy feet, brown as the lotus, O round-thighed (maiden), in (my) lap shall I rub them soothingly.' Karabhoru, voc. c. of karabhorú. According to Pāṇini, IV., i., 69, Ūru, 'a thigh or hip,' at the end of this and some other compounds becomes úrú and is declined like vadhú; and karabhorúh is said to be equivalent to erittorúh stri, 'a woman with round thighs.' Karabha is 'the thick part of the hand,' 'the part between the wrist and the fingers;' it is also 'a young elephant.' Dr. Boehtlingk considers that the comparison is taken from the first of these senses. It may with more reason be taken from the other: for from the following gloss of Chandra-śekhara, it seems probable that as kara stands for both the human hand and the trunk of an elephant, and karabha for the upper part of the hand, so the latter word may be taken for the same part of an elephant's trunk. Karabhah prānyangam ['is part of an animal'] tadiva úru yasyáh śubha-lakṣaṇam idam tad uktam, hasti-hasta-nibhair ['like an elephant's trunk'] vr̥ttair ['round'] asthábhaih karabhopamaih pr̥pñuvantyúrúbhīh śásvat striyah sukham anangajam. The epithet may therefore mean 'having thighs gracefully tapering like the trunk of an elephant.' Compare karabhopamorúh: Raghu-vanśa, vi., 83. Samvāhayāmi = mardayāmi: Sam-vāh is applied especially to the rubbing, kneading, or shampooing of the limbs. Padma-tāmrāu: Chézy observes that the Hindú women extracted a rosy-coloured dye from a plant called Lawsonia Inermis, with which they dyed their nails and fingers, as well as their feet. Cf. Strī-nakha-pātalam kuruvakam: Vikramorvaśī, Act 2.

² 'The day is not (yet) cool.' Aparinirvāna = anapagata-tīrtdāpah, 'having its great heat not yet passed off.' 'It was still noon.' Ś. Some MSS. have anirvāna, and others apa-nirvāna [= anirvāna, nirvāna-rahita].

received the approval of their fathers [been approved by their fathers].’ The Gándharva marriage is one of the forms of marriage described in Manu iii, 22, et seq. It is a marriage proceeding entirely from love [kāma-sambhava] or the mutual inclination [anyonyechchhá] of a youth and maiden, and concluded without any ceremonies and without consulting relatives: see especially Manu, iii., 32. Gándharva = paraspara-bhāshayá kṛto vivāha: K. The long scene which follows this verse in the Bengálí MSS. is omitted in all the Devanāgarī, and must be regarded as an interpolation.

¹ '[Behind the scenes.] O female-chakravāka, bid farewell to thy mate : the night is at hand [arrived].' Chakravāka-radhukā [Pāṇini, VII., 4, 13] i.e., the Chakravāki or female of the Ruddy goose, commonly called the Brahmanī duck (Anas Casarea). The male and female of these birds keep together during the day (whence one of their names, dvandva-chara, 'going in pairs') and are, like turtle-doves, patterns of constancy and connubial affection; but the legend is that they are doomed to pass the night apart (whence the name rātri-viślesha-gāmin) in consequence of a curse pronounced upon them by some saint whom they had offended. Accordingly, as soon as night commences, they take up their station on opposite banks of a river, and call to each other in piteous cries. The name rathānga or ratha-pāda, 'chariot-footed,' sometimes given to them, indicates some peculiar formation of the feet. Constant allusion is made to their habits: thus in the Vikram., Act 4, Sahacharīm dūre matvā viraushi sanutukah. Cf. also Meghadūta, verse 82, and Raghu-vansa, viii., 55.

(for I see that) it is the great Rishi Durvāsas, easily-provoked to anger. After uttering such a curse, he has turned back with a step tremulous, bounding and difficult to be checked through its impetuosity.' Śūnya-hṛdayā lit., 'empty-hearted,' one whose heart is engrossed with some other object. Vega-chatula, etc. : This is the reading of the Mackenzie MS., and seems to have been that of K. All the Devanāgarī have upphulla, for the Sanskrit utphula from the root sphul, 'to leap,' allied to sphur. Utphāla from the same root is given by Wilson, and both sphula and sphura, but not utphula, which is a legitimate word. As to the Prākṛit upphulla, it may be observed that many consonants in Prākṛit are too weak to sustain themselves singly, and that if elision does not take place, the consonant is sometimes doubled. Thus sukkha, or suha may be written for the Sanskrit sukha, and nihitta or nihia for nihita : Lassen's Instit. Prāk., p. 276, 3. The oldest Bengālī MS. has avirala-pādoddhārayā, and the Calcutta edition avirala-pāda-twarayā gatyā. As to Durvāsas, he is a Saint or Muni, represented by the Hindū poets as excessively choleric, and inexorably severe. The Purāṇas and other poems contain frequent accounts of the terrible effects of his imprecations on various occasions, the slightest offence being in his eyes deserving of the most fearful punishment. On one occasion he cursed Indra, merely because his elephant let fall a garland which he had given to this god; and in consequence of this imprecation all plants withered, men ceased to sacrifice, and the gods were overcome in their wars with the demons : see Vishṇu-Pur., p. 70. With regard to the title Maharshi : see p. 38, note 3, and p. 43, note 2.

temporaneous setting and rising of the two luminaries, human beings are guided as it were through their different states:' i.e., by the alternations of these luminaries, the vicissitudes to be expected in human life are indicated.
One of the names of the Moon is Ośadhī-patih, 'lord of the annual or medicinal plants.' He is so called from some influence which he is supposed to exercise over the growth of such plants. Compare Deut., xxxiii., 14, forth by the moon.' Oshadhī is explained in Manu, i. 46, as phala-pákántā, 'a plant which dies after the ripening of its fruit.' Asta is the name for the mountain in the West, behind which, in Hindú poetry, the sun and moon are always supposed to set, as Udaya is the name of that over which they are supposed to rise. Arka is a name of the god Súrya, 'the Sun.' He is represented in Hindú mythology, as seated in a chariot drawn by seven green horses, or by one horse with seven heads [whence his name Saptásiva], and before him is a lovely youth without legs, who acts as his charioteer, and who is called Aruna, or the Dawn personified. Aruna is the son of Kaśyapa and Vinatā, and elder brother of Garuḍa. His imperfect form may be allusive to his gradual or partial appearance, his legs being supposed to be lost, either in the darkness of the departing night, or in the blaze of the coming day. The sentiment expressed in this verse is paralleled by the speech of the Chándála in the Mṛicchhakatī [p. 321, l. 4], thus translated by Prof. Wilson, 'In heaven itself the sun and moon are not free from change [vipattim labhete]: how should we poor weak mortals hope to escape it in this lower world? One man rises but to fall, another falls to rise again,' etc.

¹ 'The moon having disappeared, even the lotus no longer gladdens my sight, its beauty being now only a matter of remembrance. The sorrows produced by the absence of a lover are beyond measure hard to be supported by a tender-girl.' Some species of the lotus-plant (especially the white esculent kind) open their petals during the night and close them during the day, whence the Moon is often called the Friend, Lover, or Lord of the lotuses [Kumuda-bāndhava, kumudini-náyaka, Kumudésa]. Abalā-janasya: The Bengálí have abalā-janena. The genitive is equally admissible. Compare śriyo durápah, which is the Bengálí reading for śriyā-durápah at p. 117, l. 13, and svabhāvas tasya duratikramah: Hitop. l. 1945.

The Bengālī reading is apātī-khepena. Patākshepena = yavanikāpanodanena : K. : = akasmāt, 'suddenly.' Ś. 'Moreover, the early dawn impurples the dew-drops upon the jujubes: the peacock, shaking off sleep, quits the darbha-grass-thatch of the cottage: and yonder the antelope, rising hastily from the border of the altar impressed by his hoofs, afterwards raises himself on high, stretching his limbs. Asatya-sandhe = asatya-pratiṇe : Ś. = mithyā-pratiṇe : Ch. : lit., 'one who is not true to his contract [sandhi].' Śuddha-hridaya is the reading of two Devanāgarī MSS., and of the Bengālī. Padam = sthānam, 'a place.' Ś. = vyavasāya or vyavasīti, 'industry,' 'application,' 'business.' Ch. and Amarakoṣha, p. 317, l. 4. Hence padam kri in the causal must mean 'to cause to have dealings or transactions with,' 'to cause to apply one's self,' 'to cause to take up a station;' whence may easily flow the interpretation, 'made to trust.' Compare a similar phrase in Kumāra-sam., vi., 14, where also the commentators explain padam by vyavasāya.

The Bengālī and K. insert me before āśochantiyā, and read parigrīhitām for pratirakṣitām.

Fire was an important object of veneration with the ancient Hindūs, as with the ancient Persians. Perhaps the chief worship recommended in the Vedas is that of Fire and the Sun.

Brāhman when they married and became householders, unless they intended giving up their sacerdotal office, kindled with two pieces of the hard Śamī, Arani, or Khadira wood, or with a piece of the Śamī and Aśwattha wood [see page 23, note 2], a sacred fire [homāgni, grīhyāgni, hūtāgni] which they deposited in a cavity or hearth called Kunda or Vitāṇa, in some hallowed part of the house; or, like the Persians, in some sacred building proper for the purpose [called agnyāgāra, Manu, iv., 58, homa-sūlā, agni-grīha], and which they carefully kept lighted throughout their lives, using it first for their nuptial ceremony [Manu, ii., 231; iii., 171; Sir W. Jones, vol. iii., 127], and for the regular morning and evening oblations to Agni [homa, hotra], performed by dropping clarified butter, etc. into the flame, with prayers and invocations [Manu, xi., 41; iii., 81, 84, 85. See also p. 133, note 1 of this book]; for the performance of solemn sacrifices [Manu, ii., 143]; for the Śrāddha or obsequies to departed parents and ancestors [Manu, iii., 212, et seq. See also page 112, note 1 of this book]; and finally, for the funeral pile. The perpetual maintenance of this sacred fire was called agni-hotra, agnyādāna, agni-rakshana; and the consecration of it, agnyādheya [Manu, ii., 143]; and the Brāhman or householder who maintained it, agni-hotrin, dhītāgni, agnyādhitā, sāgnika. At Benares even to this day, according to Sir W. Jones, many agni-hotras are continually blazing. Sometimes the householder did not himself attend to the sacred fire, but engaged an officiating priest [ritvij, yajamdna, agnidhra: see p. 95, note 1; p. 96, note 2]. The Brāhman who did not maintain a fire was called anāhitāgni [Manu, xi., 38]. According to Manu, iii., 212 (with commentary) there were three periods when he was necessarily without it, viz., just before his investiture, before his marriage after the completion of his studentship, and at the death of his wife; but the usual daily oblation was then to be placed in the hand of a holy Brāhman, who is said to be one form of fire [see p. 74, note 3; p. 49, note 2]. Sacred fire is sometimes considered to be of three kinds [tretā, 'the triad of fires']: 1. Gārhapatya, nuptial or household; 2. Āhavanīya, sacrificial, taken from the preceding,

This was probably a mangala-pushpa-mayī sraj, or garland made of auspicious flowers, to be suspended round the neck of Śakuntalā, such as that described in Raghu-vanśa, vi., 84. Śāṅkara and the Bengālī read kēsara-guṇḍāh or kēsara-chūrnāh, and Śāṅkara observes that the fragrant dust of this plant is much used by women in making unguents [udvartanāni].

and most nutritious pasture for cattle, and its usefulness, added to its beauty, induced the Hindús to believe that it was the mansion of a benevolent nymph.' The Atharva-Veda celebrates it thus: 'May Dúrbá, which rose from the water of life, which has a hundred roots and a hundred stems, efface a hundred of my sins, and prolong my existence on earth for a hundred years.' Samdambhana is the act of smearing the body with coloured perfumes, such as saffron, sandal, etc.; the plural is here used for the unguents themselves, which are said to be mangala, 'conducive to good fortune.' The Bengálí have samdambhanam.

¹ 'Śárngarava and the (other) good-people:' see page 6, note 2. The Bengálí have Śárngarava-śáradoata-miśráh. According to Ś. and Ch. these were the names of two śishyák, 'religious students,' pupils of Kanva.

² 'Truly these Rishis who are to go to Hastinápura are being called.' Śabdāyyanto (so written by Ch.) = dhūyanto: Ś. and Ch. It is the passive form of the nominal śabdāyate: Śankara has śabdāyante, which could only mean 'they sound,' 'make a noise;' Pāṇini, iii., 1, 17. Hastinápura, [lit., 'the city of elephants'] was the ancient Delhi, situated on the Ganges, and the residence of Dushyanta.

^१ 'There stands Śakuntalā at earliest sunrise, with her locks combed-and-washed, in the act of being congratulated by the holy-women, (having) consecrated wild-rice in their hands, (and) invoking-blessings-with-their-offerings.' Śikhā-māryitā, lit., 'having her top-knot combed and cleansed,' a compound similar to śirah-snāta, 'having the head bathed.' The Bengālī MSS. have kṛita-majjand. Swasti-vāchanikābbhiḥ is here an epithet of the women who make the swasti-vāchanam, i.e. (according to K.) 'a gift of flowers, sweet-meats [prahelaka], fruit, or any eatables presented with good wishes and prayers for the blessing of some deity.' It is especially the blessing which is coupled with the gift. In the present case the hallowed rice which they held in their hands, might have constituted the offering which accompanied the swasti-vāchanam. In the Vikramorvaśī the Vidūshaka is propitiated by a swasti-vāchanam (or -nakam), consisting of a modaka-śardāva, 'dish of sweet-meats.' Birthday-gifts, wedding-presents, Christmas-boxes, etc., with their accompanying compliments, are the swasti-vāchanaka of our day. The words vidyana and vidyanaka seem to have a similar signification, though without any necessary implication of good-wishes. Nivāra, 'wild-rice,' Manu, vi., 16.

Compare Kumāra-s., v. 69. Lākṣhā = alakta or alaktaka, 'lac,' 'a red dye,' prepared from an insect, analogous to the cochineal insect. This minute red insect is found in great numbers in the Palāśa, Indian fig-tree, and some other trees. It punctures the bark, whence exudes a resinous milky juice, with which it surrounds itself in a kind of nest, and which when dry may be broken off, and used for various purposes. This hardened and reddened substance is variously called gum-lac, shell-lac, stick-lac, etc. Āparva, etc. = parva-bhāga-par-yantam udgataṅih. Parva-bhāga = maṇi-bandha, 'the wrist.' K. Ā, 'as far as,' generally requires the ablat. c. of a word not in composition, as āmāṇi-bandhāt pāṇiḥ, 'the hand as far as [from] the wrist.' It may sometimes have the sense of 'from,' as in ādarsandāt, 'from the first sight.' Tat-kisalaya, etc. : the Bengālī and Ś. read nah, 'to us,' for tat, and kisalaya-chehhāya-parisparadhībhiḥ, 'rivalling the hue of young shoots.' According to Kavikanthahāra, quoted by Ś., ornaments are divided into four kinds :—1. Āvedhya, as ear-rings, etc.; 2. Bandhantya or Vedhya, as flowers, etc.; 3. Kshepya or Prakshepya, as anklets, foot-ornaments, etc.; 4. Āropya, as necklaces, garlands, etc.

The Brāhman was required to divide his life into four stages or orders [āśramā]. ² 'Daughter, be thou highly honoured of thy husband, as was Śarmishthā of Yayāti. Do thou also obtain a son, a sovereign monarch, as she (obtained) Puru.' Śarmishthā, according to K., was the daughter of Vṛisha-parvan, king of the Asuras or demons, and wife of Yayāti, son of Nahusha, one of the princes of the Lunar race, and ancestor of Dushyanta: see p. 14, note 2. The Sāhitya-darpana (p. 190) adduces this verse as an example of āśīrvāda, 'benediction,' but reads (as also do the Bengālī) patyur for bhartur, and putram for sutam. The Rig-veda is the most celebrated of the four most ancient sacred books of the Hindūs. It consists of metrical hymns or prayers termed

Verse 88. TRISHTUP CHATUSH-PADĀ, a form of VAIDIK metre, consisting of four times eleven syllables, the first and third half-lines resembling the VĀTORMĪ, and the second and fourth, the ŚĀLINĪ variety of TRISHTUBH. In the second, however, the first syllable is short.

In the Rig-veda, i., 59, 5, the first pāda is exactly like the first in the above scheme, but the other pādas are arranged differently, as far at least as the seventh syllable. Kālidāsa, accustomed to the strictness of the later Sanskrit metres, seems here to have endeavoured to imitate the Vaidik rhythm, in which greater liberty was allowed. Thus he produced a verse too irregular to come under any of the later metres, but rather too regular for a Vaidik hymn.

It is certain that the verse itself does not occur in the Rig-veda, but the metre [see p. 160] resembles that which commonly prevails there. Doubtless Kālidāsa intended it as an imitation of the sacred style of poetry. That it is addressed to Agni constitutes another point of resemblance. Vaitānās: see p. 148, note 3; p. 97, note 2. Kṛipta-dhishnyāḥ = rachitādhishtānāḥ. Prānta-sanstirna-darbhāḥ, i.e., pārśveshu chatas-riṣhu dikṣhu sanktirṇa darbhā yeshām. At a sacrifice, the fires, severally termed Ahavanīya, Mānjaliya, Gārhapatya, and Agnīthriya, were lighted at the four cardinal points, east, west, north, and south, and kusa-grass [see p. 18, note 1] was scattered round each fire. See Wilson's translation of the Rig-veda, p. 3, note 1; and compare Rig-veda, vii., 13, 'Thou, four-eyed Agni, blazest as the protector of the worshippers,' etc. Pālayantu = rakṣantu is the reading of all the Bengāl MSS., supported by Kāṭavema, Śankara, and Chandra-śekhara, but the Devanāgarī MSS. all have pārayantu.

¹ Śankara quotes a verse of Bharata, Devāścha, munayaschaiva, linginah, sādhanāścha [sādhakāścha: Ch.] ye, bhagavanniti te vāchydh sarvaiḥ stri-pun-napunsakair, 'Both Gods, and also Munis, Lingis, and Sādhanas (? sādhavas, 'saints': see Vishnu-Pur., p. 300) are to be addressed as 'Bhagavan,' by all women, men and eunuchs.'

breezes.' Śivaśca bhūyāt panthāh : This seems to have been a phrase commonly used as a parting benediction, like the English 'A pleasant journey to you!' Compare Panthānas te santu śivāh : Hitop., I. 1442, Sāhit.-darp., p. 344, Mudrā-r., p. 30, l. 17, and further on in this act.

<sup>1</sup> 'Dear to thee as (thy own) kinsfolk.' Compare vana-rāsa-bandhubhī in verse 90. My own Bombay MS. has ṇādi (supported by the Calcutta edition), the others all ṇādi for ṇāti. There is no doubt about the doubling of the ṇ when not initial, as Vararuchi, iii., 44, gives vinndāna for vijndāna.
As to bhaavadinam : see p. 129, note 2.

dukkhena.

<sup>3</sup> 'One may observe the same (troubled) condition [the same condition is observed] of the penance-grove, as the (time of) separation from thee approaches.' Samavasthā is equivalent to samdvasthā, as in Raghu-vansā, viii., 41. The Taylor MS. reads samdvasthā.

<sup>1</sup> 'The deer let fall the mouthfuls of darbha-grass, the peacocks cease (their) dancing, the creepers as they cast [in casting] their pale leaves, appear to shed tears [as it were shed tears].' Udgalita: so read all the Devanāgarī and K.; the root gal, 'to drop,' is not given in the dictionaries in conjunction with the preposition ut, but as one sense of this root is 'to swallow' [whence gala, 'the throat'], udgalita may possibly be equivalent to ulgrāṇa, 'ejected from the throat or mouth,' which is the reading of the Bengālī MSS. Mṛigāḥ: all the Devanāgarī read mīṭo for mṛigyaḥ, and in the next line assūni for āsrūni, apparently in violation of the metre. Dr. Bochtlingk has suggested miā and ansū, the latter is a legitimate acc. pl. from ansu, the masculine Prakṛit equivalent of the neuter āsrū: see Vararuchi, iv., 15. Parityakta-nartana: The dancing of the Indian peacock, especially at the approach of rain, in which it is said to take especial delight, is frequently alluded to in Hindu poetry. Compare Megh., verses 46 and 78; Rīta-saṅhāra, ii., 6. Bhartri-h., i., 43. Osarīa for apasrita: compare p. 5, l. 9, and Lassen's Instit. Prāk., p. 363. Raghu-vanśa, xiv., 69, contains a sentiment precisely parallel to the above, Nṛityam mayūrah kusumāni vṛikṣā darbhaṇ upātān vijahur harīnyah, etc.

Verse 92. Āvā or Gāthā. See Verse 2.

The feminine noun bāhā is more appropriately joined with śākhā, but bāhū is admissible: compare p. 25, l. 2. The Bengālī have śākhāmayair bāhubhīh, 'with arms consisting of branches.'

superfluous. It is not necessary, however, to connect it with nayanayor, as the passage might be rendered 'make the tears that impede our business cease to cling in (thy) upturned-eyelashed-eyes.' Vāshpa is the hot moisture that precedes the formation of tears: see p. 157, note 3. It does not seem to be used in the plural. Cf. munchato vāshpam ushnam: Megh., verse 12. Viratānubandha: my own MS. has vihatānubandha: Anubandha, lit., 'binding after,' 'following after,' hence 'cleaving,' 'adhering.' The Bengālī MSS. have vithilānubandham = vāntārambham [sic?]: Ś. Vishambhāvanti = skhalitāni syuh, 'are liable to trip or stumble.' Ś. and Ch. Compare page 139, line 4.

<sup>1</sup> 'Friend, see! the poor female-Chakravāka not perceiving her dear mate hid by the lotus-leaves, calls to (him) thus: "Hard (is the lot) I suffer:"' See page 129, note 1, and compare in Vikram., Act IV., Sarasi nalini-patrenāpi twam dvṛita-vigrahām nanu sahacharim' dūre matvā viraushi samutsukah, 'Thou indeed [i.e., the male chakravāka] art sorrowfully crying to thy mate thinking her to be far away, although her body is, only concealed from thee by a lotus-leaf.' A few lines before this passage, the cry is compared to the sound ka ka. Whether this may have anything to do with the somewhat harsh phrase dukkaram karemi, here employed as the cry of the bird, need not be discussed. All the Devanāgarī concur in this reading. Kāṭavema, however, has dushkaram khalu aham tarkayāmi. The root kṛi sometimes has the sense of tark, 'think,' 'imagine' [Cf. page 41, note 1]. indeed, there are few senses which this root 'of all work' may not have, when conjoined with nouns; and dushkaram kṛi is not more harsh than śokam kṛi, 'to make or suffer sorrow.' Śāṅkara has dushkaram ayam chakravākah karoti. Instead of pia three of the MSS. have bi for api. 'This verse indicates that Śakuntalā foresees she is about to experience similar sorrow, in having to endure separation from Dushyanta in consequence of the curse' [śāpa-tirohita-Dushyantam alapsyamānā]: K.

Chandana [σανταλον], the Sirium myrtifolium, 'a large kind of myrtle with pointed leaves,' the wood of which affords many highly esteemed perfumes, unguents, etc., and is celebrated for its delicious scent. It is found chiefly on the slopes [tata, upatyakā : Ragh., iv., 46, 48] of the Malaya mountains, which are thence called chandanaśhala, the tree being sometimes called Malaya-ja, 'Malaya-born.' Frequent allusion is made to this tree being infested by snakes : see Ragh., iv., 48 ; Hitop., line 1582. Tara, of which the Sanskrit equivalent is probably tata, is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS. It is synonymous with utsanga, 'the slope of a hill,' so that Malayasya utsangāt exactly answers to tātasya-ankāt [anka = utsanga : Amara-kosha, iv., 1, 4.] D and r are certainly interchangeable in Sanskrit and Prākṛit, and the substitution of d for t is usual. L, however, is the more common substitute, and, I confess that my first idea was that Malaya-tara was for Mayala-tala = Malayasya upatyakā : Ragh., iv., 46.

<sup>1</sup> 'The sun has ascended to another division (of the sky).' The Mackenzie MS. has yugāntam adhirūdhah; the Calcutta edition dūram adhirūdhah; Chézy gaganāntaram adhirūdhah. According to Chandra-śekhara, yuga is by some considered equivalent to prahara, 'a division of the day, comprising one-eighth of the sun's diurnal revolution, or three hours;' by others, to hasta-chatushtayam, 'a space of four cubits.' Dr. Boehtlingk considers yugāntara to be the second half of the arc described by the sun in the heavens, and translates, 'The Sun has already entered the afternoon-quarter of the heavens.'

The Bengálí have a parallel phrase sa-dig-anta-mahi. Kátavema explains it by ohatvōdrah antāh yasyāh sá. Compare p. 124, l. 7. Daushyanti is a regular, though not very common form of patronymic, derived from Dushyanta, as Dákshi, 'a descendant of Daksha,' from Daksha; Aindri from Indra, etc. See Laghu-kaum., No. 1072. Apra-

Also Manu, vi, 2, 3, 'When the Father of a family perceives his own wrinkles and grey hair, committing the care of his wife to his sons, or accompanied by her, let him repair to the woods,' i.e., Let him enter upon the third quarter of his life, that of a hermit: see p. 157, note 3 at end. Śānte: compare p. 20, l. 4. Padam: compare page 145, note 3 at end.

1 'How, my child, will the grief of me, looking at the oblation of rice-grains formerly offered by thee, germinating at the door of the cottage, ever be assuaged [ever go to assuagement]?' Charita, so reads the Colebrooke MS.; the others have rachita-purvam = purā-vihitam: Ś. Charita is supported by charu, 'an oblation of rice.' The bali, or griha-bali is a particular kind of offering, identical with the bhūta-yajna, i.e., a sacrifice for all creatures, but especially in honour of those demigods and spiritual beings called griha-devatāh, 'household deities,' which are supposed to hover round and protect households [Manu, iii., 80], or to whom some particular part of the house is sacred. This offering was made by throwing up into the air [Manu, iii., 90] in some part of the house generally at the door [Manu, iii., 88] the remains of the morning and evening meal of rice or grain; uttering at the same time a mantra or prayer to some of the inferior deities, according to the place in which it was made [Manu, iii., 87, etc.], whether to Indra with his followers the Maruts, or to Kuvera with his followers the Guhhyakas, Kinnaras, Yakshas, etc., or to the spirits of trees, waters, etc. [Manu, iii., 88, 89]. According to Colebrooke it might be presented with the following Pāṇinik prayer, 'May gods, men, cattle, birds, demigods, benevolent genii, serpents, demons, departed spirits, blood-thirsty savages, trees, and all who desire food given by me—may reptiles, insects, flies, and all hungry beings or spirits concerned in this rite, obtain contentment from this food left them by me!' It was sometimes offered by the women of the house, who might assist in any sacrifice, provided they abstained from repeating the mantras [Manu, iii., 121], and as the offering was intended for all creatures, even the animals were supposed to have their share in it. [Manu, iii., 92] In point of fact the crows, dogs, insects, etc. in the neighbourhood of the house were the real consumers of it [whence bali-pushpa, bali-bhuj, griha-bali-bhuj, as names of a crow, crane, sparrow, etc.: compare Hitop., l. 1076] and such of the grains as escaped being devoured by them would be likely to germinate about the threshold. This bali formed one of the five great sacrifices or religious rites, sometimes called sacraments, which the householder who maintained a perpetual fire [see p. 148, note 3] and devoted himself to the priesthood had daily to perform [Manu, iii., 67, iv., 21]: viz.—1. Brahma-yajna, in honour of the Rishis, the authors of the Vedas, and therefore performed by the study of the Vedas and holy writ in general [Manu, iv., 147]. 2. Deva-yajna, in honour of the superior gods, performed by oblations to Fire himself, or through Fire to the other gods [see p. 148, note 3, and Manu, iii., 84, 85]. 3. Pitri-yajna, in honour of the progenitors of mankind [Manu, iii., 194], and especially deceased ancestors, performed by pouring out water with tila, etc. [Manu, iii., 202]. The solemn celebration of this offering at stated periods was called Śrāddha: see p. 112, note 1. 4. Manushya-yajna or Nri-yajna, in honour of men, performed by offering water, food, a scat, etc., to a guest: see p. 35, note 2; and Manu, iii., 99, etc. 5. Bhūta-yajna, or Bali, in honour of all creatures of every description, but particularly of those not provided for by the other four sacrifices. It might have reference, however, to the deities and beings honoured in the other sacraments. That it had especial reference to the Griha-devatāḥ is indicated in Manu, iii., 117, with commentary, and in the Mṛichekhakati, where Chārudatta, after fulfilling the Deva-kārya, or second of the above rites [compare p. 140, l. 16] is described as offering the bali to the household gods around the threshold. His speech as he offers it, corresponds remarkably with that of Kāśyapa, Yādam baliḥ sapaḍi mad-griha-dehāḥnām, hansaśoḥa sārasa-ganaśoḥa vilupta-pūrvāḥ, tānveva samprati virūḍha-trinānkurāsu, vījānjaliḥ patati kṛta-mukhāvalāhāḥ.

locks called kāka-pakṣhāḥ were left on each side. The two ceremonies of tonsure are included by Manu among the twelve sanskāras or rites which every Brāhman had to undergo. The first, or chūḍā-karana took place from one to three years old, generally after teething [Manu, ii., 35]; the second or final tonsure keśānta in the sixteenth year from conception [ii. 65]. Moksha has here a double sense—1. 'Liberation of the body from danger;' 2. 'Liberation of the soul from further transmigration:' see note 3 in this page. The last was the great object of sages and devotees in their bodily mortifications, but was often obstructed by the seductive artifices of Indra's nymphs: see p. 44, note 1.

<sup>3</sup> 'When a being (in other respects) happy becomes conscious-of-an ardent-longing on seeing charming objects and hearing sweet sounds, then in all probability, without being aware of it, he remembers with his mind the friendships of former births, firmly-rooted in his heart.' Ramyāni, i.e., vastāni: S. Kātavama has rūpāni for ramyāni and sthītāni for sthirāni.

Abodha-pūram, 'without any previous intimation or suggestion,' 'unconsciously.' Compare the similar expressions, amati-pūram, abuddhi-pūram, 'without any previous idea.' The doctrine of transmigration is an essential dogma of the Hindú religion. Dim recollections of occurrences in a former life are supposed occasionally to cross the mind, and the present condition of every person is supposed to derive its character of happiness or misery, elevation or degradation from the virtues or vices of a previous state of being. The consequences of actions in a former birth are called vipāka.

<sup>1</sup> The Kanchukī or chamberlain was the attendant on the women's apartments. Śankara and Chandra-śekhara quote the following from Bharata: Antahpura-charo vridhho vipro guṇa-gaṇānveitah sarva-kāryārtha-kūśalah kanchukī abhidhiyate. Jara-vaiklavya-yuktena viśed gātreṇa kanchukī; 'The character styled kanchukī is an attendant in the inner apartments, an old-man, a brāhman, endowed with numerous good qualities, and a clever man of business. The kanchukī should enter with a body decrepit and tottering from age.' Compare this scene, and the speeches of the Chamberlain, with the opening scene of the 3rd. Act of the Vikramorvaśī.

<sup>2</sup> 'The wand [staff of office] which was assumed by me, having to watch over the royal female apartments, thinking "It is a matter of form," much time having elapsed since then, that same (wand) has become (indispensable, or a useful crutch) for the support of me whose step falters in walking.' Vetra-yashti, properly 'a cane-stick,' used as a badge of office, like the gold stick or black rod in European courts. Avalitena, lit., 'attentive,' 'careful,' 'watchful,' i.e., 'appointed to a careful superintendence or watch.' So read all the Devanāgarī; the Bengālī, with Śankara, have adhikritena, i.e., 'by me set over,' etc. Avarodha-griheshu: see p. 21, note 1. Bahutithe = bahu- sankhye: Chézy. Kátavema observes that bahu is here treated as a numeral, litha being a kind of ordinal affix. See Carey and Forster's Grammar, and Wilson's Dictionary. The latter translates bahutitha by "maneth."

(Charitārthatā = rājya-prāptih, 'the attainment of the throne:' Ś. Duk-khotarā = kheḍa-samvalitā, 'encompassed with trouble:' Ś.

<sup>2</sup> 'The attainment-of-the-object-of-ambition satisfies anxious longing merely: the very business of guarding what has been obtained, harasses.
Royalty [the office of king] like a parasol, the handle of which is held in the hand, is not for the removal of great fatigue without leading to fatigue.'
Autsukyam = utkanthā, 'longing,' 'eager desire:' such as *kadā rājā bhavi-highest-rank allays:' Ch. Śāṅkara reads pratiśṭhām, and places it in opposition to autsukya-mātram, making rājyam the nominative case to arasā-dayati. The Bengāl MS. [E. I. II. 1060] gives pratiśṭhām in the margin, and this reading is certainly supported by the parallel passage (sādayanti pratiśṭhām, etc.) in the beginning of Act 3 of the Vikramorvaśī. Chandra Śekhara also notices this reading, but adopts the one in the text and censures the interpretation of Śāṅkara. Pratiśṭhā may, without doubt, have the sense I have given, which agrees with the prārthitārthādāhigamaḥ and chari-tārthatā of the preceding lines. Ati-śrama may either refer to the trouble which the king has undergone in arriving at the object of his ambition, or to the troubles of his subjects which it is his office to remove. In the latter case na cha śramāya will mean 'without leading to personal trouble or weariness.' The Indian chattar, or parasol, from the shelter it affords has been chosen as one of the insignia of royalty. It is very heavy, and being fixed on a long pole greatly fatigues the person holding it. It is always borne by a servant; but here the king is figuratively made to bear it himself, so that he cannot give shelter to himself and others, without undergoing great personal fatigue. Na cha śramāya: is found in all the Devanāgarī MSS.; the Bengālī have yathā śramāya, i.e., 'Royalty does not so much lead to the removal of fatigue as to fatigue.' According to Kāṭavema, who repeats the first negative before na cha śramāya, the two negatives are here employed affirmatively, i.e., to affirm that royalty does lead to personal fatigue. 'It is not for the removal of great fatigue and not not for fatigue.' (Compare the note on this use of the negatives, p. 24, note 1.

<sup>1</sup> Vaitālika = vandin, 'a herald.' Ch. = stuti-pāthaka, 'a panegyrist.' Ś. He was a kind of herald or orier, whose duty was to announce in measured verse, the fixed periods into which the king's day was divided. The strain which he poured forth usually contained allusions to incidental circumstances. In the Vikramorvaśī and Ratnāvalī, only one Vaitālika appears, but here and in the Mālavikāgnimitra there are two. In the Vikramorvaśī [Act 2] he announces the sixth hour or watch of the day, about two or three o'clock, at which period alone the king is allowed to amuse himself. Professor Wilson observes that the royal station was no sinecure. From the Daśa-kumāra it appears that the day and night were each divided into eight portions of one hour and a half, reckoned from sunrise, and thus distributed:—Day—1. The king being dressed, is to audit accounts; 2. He is to pronounce judgment in appeals; 3. He is to breakfast; 4. He is to receive and make presents; 5. He is to discuss political questions with his ministers; 6. He is to amuse himself; 7. He is to review his troops; 8. He is to hold a military council. —Night—1. He is to receive the reports of his spies and envoys; 2. He is to sup or dine; 3. He is to retire to rest, after the perusal of some sacred work; 4 and 5. He is to sleep; 6. He is to rise and purify himself; 7. He

For the tree suffers intense heat with its head (while) it allays by (its) shade the heat of those seeking (its) shelter.' Ātharvā: see p. 30, note 1. Vṛttir: some of the Bengálí, supported by K. and Ś., have sṛishtir.

<sup>2</sup> 'Having assumed the mace [sceptre] thou restrainest those who advance on the wrong road [set out on bad courses]; thou composest differences; thou art adequate to the protection (of thy people). Let kinsmen make their appearance forsooth in affluent circumstances [when there is abundant property] but in thee the whole duty of a kinsman is comprehended towards thy subjects.' Ātta-danda = grihita-danda. Danda, 'a magistrate's staff,' taken as a symbol of punishment, and justice. It is sometimes 'the sceptre of a king.' Hence danda-dhara, dandin, 'Staff-bearer,' etc., are names for Yama, the god of justice and lord of punishment. Vimarga: some have kumārḡa, 'bad ways.' Kalpase = sampadyase: K. Manu furnishes several examples of klrip in the sense of 'to be sufficient,' 'to be fit:' ii., 151; ii., 266; vi., 20. Also Raghu-v., viii., 40. Ātanushu vibhaveshu = utsaveshu, 'at times of festivity.' Kukshimbharibhis taih kim prayo-janam, 'What is the use of these parasitical gluttons as relations?': K. The Calcutta edition and Ś. have samvibhaktāh for santu nāma. The meaning may certainly be 'Let kinsmen make their appearance [i.e., start up they will displayed?' Swit is a particle of question and doubt. Avagunthana = mastakāchadana-vastra : Ch. The second half of this verse is clear.

<sup>1</sup> 'The suspicion [conjecture] engendered by my curiosity does not seem appropriate.' The Mackenzie MS., supported by K., has padihādi for prati-bhāti [in place of pasaradi for prasarati, the reading of the other Devanāgarī] and padihado for pahido. I have retained pahido, as it appears to make the best sense; but the Prākṛit seems here hardly to admit of literal Sanskrit interpretation.

<sup>3</sup> 'Having reflected on [called to mind], the affection of thy lord, be firm.' Bhāva = eneha : compare p. 112, note 3. The Bengālī have smṛitā for avadhārya. Ārya-putra, 'son of a venerable parent,' is the regular dramatic mode of addressing a husband.

<sup>3</sup> 'My title of Rājā has indeed significancy.' The Rishis had, in the preceding verse, compared the king to the Sun, and rājan is derived from rāj, 'to shine.' It is, however, probable that the play is on the words rājan and rakshitri. Compare Manu, vii., 3. Rakshārtham asya sarvasya rājānam asrijat prabhuh, 'The Supreme Being created a king for the protection of this universe.' Dr. Boehtlingk remarks that in these cases it little signifies whether the derivation be true or false. In Mahābh., xii., 1032, rājan is derived from the root ranj, 'to conciliate.'

<sup>4</sup> 'Is his reverence Kāśyapa prosperous for the welfare of the world?' Kūśali: see p. 35, note 1. Bhagavān, etc.: When the letter l is preceded by t, d, or n dental, it requires the assimilation of the letters to itself, and in the case of dental n, the mark called Chandra-vindu is written over, to show that the l substituted for it has a nasal sound: Laghu-kaum., No. 79.

<sup>5</sup> 'Saints [ṛṣi., men endowed with or capable of perfection: Vish. Pur., p. 45] have prosperity in their power. He with inquiries about your safety says this to your highness.' It will be readily remarked that the character of these Rishis is evidently that of plain, honest, independent men. Arāmaya: see Manu, ii., 127, 'Let a man ask a Brāhman, on meeting him, as to his kūśalam; a Kshatriya, as to his andmayam; a Vaiśya, as to his kshenam; and a Śūdra, as to his drogyam.' The king was of course a Kshatriya: see page 30, note 2.

<sup>2</sup> 'Thou art esteemed by us the chief of the worthy, and Śakuntalā, incarnate virtue. Brahmā [the Lord of creatures] bringing together a bride and bridegroom of equal merit, has after a long time (now first) incurred no censure.' Nah, the Colebrooke MS. reads yat. Vadhū-varam, a Dvandwa compound in the neuter gender. Vāchyam na gatah: whether Brahmā was famous for presiding over ill-assorted marriages, or whether there may be some allusion here to the bad character he obtained among the gods by his incestuous attempt on the virtue of his own daughter, is not clear.

<sup>3</sup> 'Therefore now let her, being quick with child, be received, for the joint discharge of religious-rites,' i.e., those rites or sanskāras, which were performed for the child before and after birth, probably by the parents conjointly [saha]: see Manu, ii., 27, etc.

The Devanāgarī MSS. have imā for iminā. The latter, which is the reading of the oldest Bengālī, I have retained on account of the metre. There is no reason why in Prākṛit iminā should not be used for the fem. instrum., since imassim is admissible for the fem. loc.: see p. 36, l. 2. Ekaikam = anyonyam, 'mutually': Ś., Ch. Bhannadu is the reading of some of the Bengālī MSS. followed by the Calcutta edition; I have written bhannadu for bhanādu, on account of the metre, and on the authority of Lassen's Inst. Prak., p. 277. The Devanāgarī have kim bhanāmi; which reading violates the metre and makes the construction of the sentence very obscure. They also read ekkam ekkaśa. Eka may be for eka-janah, applicable to either gender. The commentary of Chandra-śekhara is in favour of the above interpretation.

<sup>2</sup> 'On account of dislike to a deed done, is opposition to justice becoming in a king?' This is the reading of the oldest Bengālī, and I have adopted it as preferable to that of the Devanāgarī, Kim kṛita-kārya-āpesho dharmam prati vimukhatā kṛitavajñā. Dr. Boehtlingk has endeavoured to solve the difficulty by suggesting that kṛitavajñā should be struck out of the text, as being probably an interpolation from the margin. All the Devanāgarī, however, introduce it.

Dushyanta according to the Gāndharva form [p. 127, note 4] during the the causal may sometimes give the sense of 'allowing,' or 'permitting,' as in nāśayati, 'he suffers to perish.' Pātrikṛito, a very noticeable phrase, is a Chwī compound, formed from pātram, a neuter noun meaning 'a receptacle,' applied to express any deserving or worthy person: see Manu, iv., 227.

śochaniya, 'to be sorrowed for;' but Chandra-śekhara has śodhaniya, and is followed by Chézy and the Calcutta edition. The meaning will then be

'I myself am now to be cleared [justified] by myself.' All the MSS., except one, insert me.

the correct word, to which samudāchdro must be here equivalent.

<sup>1</sup> 'Peace! a sin!' i.e., 'Silence! let me not listen to such sinful words;' or, if no stop is placed after śāntam, 'May the sin be palliated!' This seems to be the usual formula in the plays for averting the ill effects of blasphemous, malevolent, or lying words. Sometimes the stage-direction karnau pīdhāya is omitted: compare Acts vii., 57; Mṛich., p. 36, l. 5; p. 230, l. 6; p. 306, l. 9; p. 329, l. 1. Mālavik., p. 69, l. 10. Mudr., p. 24, l. 5.

<sup>1</sup> 'In all probability the ring slipped from (the finger of) thee as thou wert offering homage to the water at Śachī's holy-pool, within Śakrávatára.' Śakra is a name of Indra, and Śakrávatára some sacred place of pilgrimage where he descended upon earth. Śachī is his wife, to whom there was probably a tirtha, or holy bathing-place [see p. 16, note 2], consecrated at this place, where Śakuntalā had performed her ablutions.

<sup>2</sup> 'This is that which is said [thus is proved the truth of the proverb] "Woman-kind is ready-witted." ' Strainam = stri-jātiḥ, 'the female sex:' K. The Bengálí have idam tat pratyutpanna-matitvam strīṇām: compare Hitop., l. 2320, where pratyutpanna-matīḥ is the name given to the ready-witted fish. See also Hitop., line 2338, 'The food of women is said to be two-fold, their wit four-fold, their cunning six-fold, and their passion eight-fold.'

<sup>3</sup> 'Here, however, sovereignty has been shown by destiny.' A similar sentiment occurs further on in this play, and at the beginning of the 4th. Act of the Vikramorvaśī, bhavitarvayatī atra balavati, 'Here destiny has shown its power.'

<sup>4</sup> Dr. Boehtlingk considers that śrotavyam is here taken as a substantive, and construes, 'The moment-for-hearing (what else you have to say) has now arrived:' compare page 111, line 7. As the passive participle is often used substantively the translation may be 'What took place is now to be heard.'

187], and interprets it by dranyakau. Some read drannao which seems to be an error for arannado nom. pl. fem. The feminine is admissible on the principle of the superiority of the human species over animals.

<sup>3</sup> 'The untaught cunning is observed of females (even) in-those-that-are-not-of-the-human-race [i.e., even in animals]; how much more (of those) who are endowed with reason [i.e., of women]. The most obvious sense of this word, if the context would allow it, would be, 'those women who have received instruction.' Para-bhṛitāh: see p. 162, note 3.

<sup>2</sup> 'For (when) I, whose state of feeling was dreadfully-severe from the absence of (all) recollection, (persisted in) not admitting that affection had privately existed (between us); it (seemed) as if (the god) Smara's bow was snapped asunder by that very-red-eyed one with excessive anger, on the parting of her curved eyebrows.' The double-entendre in the word Smara, which means 'recollection' as well as 'the god of Love,' is noticeable. See the notes on Kāmadeva, p. 99, note 2, and p. 101, note 1. The figure by which the eyebrows of a beautiful woman are compared to Cupid's bow is common, and the glances from the eye are by a similar metaphor often likened to arrows discharged from it. Śakuntalā is said to break the bow by the parting of her eyebrows, which were contracted in anger. Possibly one effect of anger might be to wrinkle the brow, which would appear to separate the eyebrows.

<sup>2</sup> Guru-lāghava is properly a kind of abstract noun formed from the Dvandwa guru-laghu, the viddhi taking place in the second member of the compound instead of the first. The sense will then be, 'I ask your reverence as to the greater and the less [i.e. the heavier and the lighter] sin.' This is addressed to the Brāhmaṇ who acts as the Purohita or family priest, whose duty it would be to advise the king as to which was the greater or less sinful course. This sense of guru-lāghava is supported by two other passages: Mahābh. xii., 1273; and Episode of Yajn., 6. The more obvious sense of the compound would be, 'the alleviation [solution] of a grave matter.'

<sup>2</sup> 'Then enters the king's brother-in-law (as) superintendent of the city-police, and two policemen [guards] bringing a man (with his hands) bound behind.' Nāgarika = nagarādhikārī, 'superintendent of the city.' Ś. = nagare niyuktah 'one set over the city:' K., and equivalent here to 'the chief of the police.' Śyāla = rāshtriya or rāshtriya [Am.-kosha, i., vii., 14]. The king's brother-in-law, who here acts as the superintendent of police, is a character not unfrequently introduced in the plays: compare Mrich., p. 224, l. 4; p. 227, l. 12; p. 230, l. 1, in which passages he is called rāja-śyālah and rāshtriya-śyālah. Kāṭavema observes that the policemen and the fishermen in this scene speak the Māgadhi form of Prakṛit: see Lassen's Instit. Prāk., p. 391, but Śāṅkara affirms that the fisherman speaks the Śākara or Śākārika dialect [Chaura-pātras tu śākara-nāmadheya śākara-prāya-bhāṣaṇāt] see Lass. Inst., Prāk., p. 422. Both Śāṅkara and Kāṭavema have omitted to make mention of the dialect spoken by the Śyāla or Nāgarika. According to Viśwanātha [Sāhit. Darp., page 180, line 12] he ought to speak the Dākshinātyā form of Prakṛit. In the Bengālī MSS., and some of the Devanāgarī, he is certainly made to speak a dialect, distinct from the other characters of this scene, but in the best MSS. pure Prakṛit forms are found in the speeches attributed to him. Indeed, as brother-in-law of the king, he must have been a Kshatriya, or one of the military caste.

<sup>2</sup> 'O thief!' Kumbhila or kumbhilaka, seems to be identical with kumbhila, kumbhilaka, kumbhila, kumbhila, etc., although the meaning 'thief' is not given to the two latter words in the dictionary. Compare in the beginning of Act 5. of the Vikramorvaśī, maṇi-kumbhila, 'gem-stealer,' (applied to the bird who swallowed the crest-jewel); at the end of Act 2, loptreṇa śuchitasya kumbhila; and in Mālavik., aho kumbhila pari-haranti chandrikā.

The name might have been engraven on the stone itself, or on the gold in which it was set. Utkṛt is used in the sense of 'excavating,' in Mahābh., i., 5813; and samutkṛta with the meaning 'perforated,' in Ragh., i., 4.

<sup>3</sup> Ābutta, 'a sister's husband,' or 'brother-in-law,' according to Amara-k., vii., 12. In Mṛich., p. 339, l. 12, this word is applied as a title of respect by a son to his father; but Dr. Boehtlingk conjectures that this may be an error for dvuka, the regular theatrical term for 'father.'

<sup>4</sup> 'I make the support of my family by nets, hooks, and the other contrivances for catching fish.' Udgāla or udgāra = valīsa or vadiśa, 'a fish-hook.' K.

<sup>5</sup> This is spoken ironically, as according to Manu (x, 46-48), the nishāda, or fisherman caste, was one of the lowest. 'Those who are considered as low-born shall subsist only by such employments as the twice-born despise

Nishddas (must subsist) by catching fish, &c.' Any occupation which involved the sin of slaughtering animals (excepting in the case of sacrificing to the god Śiva) was considered despicable. Butchers and leather-sellers were as great, or even greater, objects of scorn.

<sup>1</sup> 'That occupation in which one was born, as-the-saying-is (kila), though in-bad-repute, verily must not be abandoned. The same sacrificing-Brāhman, who is savago in the act of slaughtering animals, may be (of a disposition) tender with compassion.' Sahajam = kula-kramānugataṃ, 'inherited from one's forefathers.' Manu is very peremptory in restricting special occupations to the different castes, especially to the mixed and lowest castes, formed by intermarriage with the others. 'A man of the lowest class, who, through covetousness, lives by the acts of the highest, let the king strip of all his wealth and banish. His own office, though badly performed, is preferable to that of another, though well-performed; for he who lives by the duties of another class, immediately falls from his own : ' x., 96, 97. Hence we find the employments of fishing, slaughtering animals for food, leather-selling, basket-making, burning the dead, &c. &c., assigned to men born in certain impure castes, and confined perpetually to their descendants. To the higher and purer castes a greater variety of employment was allowed. Śankara observes that the Brāhman is called Shat-karmā, from the precept of Manu (i., 88), which enjoins upon him six occupations, viz., reading, teaching, sacrificing, assisting others to sacrifice, giving, and receiving. Under certain circumstances he was allowed by Manu to engage even in trade, and other employments. The sacrifice of animals was enjoined only on the priests of the god Śiva. The Brāhman, in the worship of this god, might have to kill animals; but this was as much a necessary part of his business, as killing fish, of the fisherman, and was no proof of any natural cruelty of disposition. Śankara defines a Śrotriya Brāhman thus: Janmanā Brāhmano jneyah sanakair dvija uchyate vidyayā yāti vipratwam tribhiḥ śrotriya uchyate, i.e., 'Birth constitutes the title Brāhman, sacramental rites (especially that of investiture with the sacred thread) the title Dwija, or twice-born; knowledge, the title Vipra; and all three Śrotriya.' The usual definition of this word is, a Brāhman conversant with śruti, or scripture.

<sup>1</sup> The Rohita or Rohi fish [Cyprinus Rohita] lit., Red-fish, is a kind of carp, found in lakes and ponds in the neighbourhood of the Ganges. It grows to the length of three feet, is very voracious, and its flesh, though coarse, is eaten. Its back is olive-coloured, its belly of a beautiful golden hue, its fins and eyes red.

<sup>2</sup> 'O Jānuka, the villain stinking (as he does) of raw flesh (is) doubtless a fisherman.' Jānuka is the name of the other policeman, who is supposed to have detected the thief; jānuka iti chora-jñātur apara-padāter nāma: Ś. Some of the Bengālī MSS. have jālua for jānuka. Visra-gandhi = amisha-gandhi: Ch. Go-ghātī: the killing of a cow [go-hatyā] is reckoned by the Hindūs a most heinous crime: compare Hitop., l. 162. Hence go-ghātī, 'cow-killer,' is applied as a reproachful epithet to any rogue or low person. Thus in the Mṛichekhakati, p. 299, l. 4; p. 317, l. 2, the Chāndāla is called go-ha or go-ghna.

‘(But) the finding [seeing, showing] of the ring by him must be (more closely) inquired into.’ Vimarshatavyam = jijñasitavyam : Ś. The root mṛi with vi has usually the sense of ‘to consider of,’ ‘investigate,’ but if the root be mṛij, the sense would be ‘must be pardoned,’ ‘overlooked.’ Kāta-vema has vimarshatavyam, from mṛij.

‘Cut-purse,’ lit., ‘knot-breaker’ or ‘knot-cutter.’ The Hindús generally carry their money tied up in a knot in one end of a cloth, which is bound round the waist.

<sup>1</sup> 'My hands tingle [my fingers itch] to bind a flower (about the head) of this victim [criminal about to be executed].' All the Devanāgarī MSS. have sumanah pinaddhum, excepting the Mackenzie, which has sumahanam for sumano. The Bengālī have got rid of the difficulty by substituting vyāpādayitum, 'to kill.' It is clear from what follows that the two policemen expected that their master would return with the king's order for putting the fisherman to death. From the Mālati-Mādhava, and other plays, it is evident that a person about to be offered as a victim to Śiva or Durgā had a wreath of flowers bound round the head. It may reasonably be assumed that this was also the case with common criminals, previous to their execution.

<sup>2</sup> 'Thou wilt be food for [an offering to] the crows [vultures], or wilt see the face of a dog.' Grīdhrā-balih: see p. 179, note 1. Śuno mukham: so read all the Devanāgarī MSS., excepting the Mackenzie, which omits the clause entirely. Dr. Boehtlingk has adopted as an emendation, śiṣṇo.

mukham, i.e., śiśor [not śiśuno] mukham, and translated 'or thou wilt see the face of (thy) child (once more).' He has supported this interpretation by a reference to two other passages, one in the 7th. Act of this play [putra-mukha-darśanena], another in Mṛich., 303, 4. Doubtless putra-mukham darśa is a common phrase, but the whole point of this passage seems to me to lie in the ludicrous substitution of śunah for putrasya.

<sup>1</sup> Yama-sadana, 'the abode of Yama,' i.e., the infernal city, Yama-pur, whither the Hindús believe a departed soul immediately repairs, and receives a just sentence from Yama, the Hindú Pluto or Minos. The name Yama, i.e., Restrainer or Punisher [from yam, 'to restrain'] is given to him as judge of departed spirits and god of punishment.

The act of impaling was called śūlāropana, and one who deserved it śūlya. 'Mounting on an elephant,' denotes elevation to high dignity, elephants being used in triumphal processions.

<sup>3</sup> So read most of the Devanāgarī MSS. Matoyikā is not given in the Dictionary. Dr. Boehtlingk translates it by fisch-brut, 'the fry of fish,' and observes that it is also the name for a kind of fish called in German schaar. Had the word been matsyika or mātsyika, 'a fisherman,' there would have been no difficulty. May it not mean 'a fish-woman,' and the phrase be translated, 'this lord of a fish-woman,' 'this husband of a fish-woman?' Kātavema and the Bengālī have matsya-śātror, 'enemy of fishes.'

<sup>1</sup> 'Let the half of this be the price of your flower (for binding about my head).' The fisherman is again ironical. The allusion of course is to the flower mentioned at p. 222, note 1. There is probably a double-entendre in sumanah, which may signify 'good-will,' as well as 'flower.'

<sup>2</sup> 'Our first friendship requires to be attested over (some) wine,' i.e., We must pledge ourselves over our cups or in drinking each other's health. Kādambarī, 'an intoxicating liquor distilled from the Kadamba flower.' Sākshikam: compare Mālavikāg., page 53, line 7; Raghu-vansā, xi., 48, and Hitopadeśa, line 842.

<sup>1</sup> Ritútsava, lit., 'the festival of the season,' i.e., the Vasantotsava, or 'great vernal festival,' in celebration of the return of spring, and said to be in honour of the god Krishna. Originally his son Kámadeva, the god of Love, must have been the object of worship in this festival. It is identified with the Holi or Dolá-yátra, the Saturnalia, or rather, Carnival of the Hindús, when people of all conditions take liberties with each other, especially by scattering red powder and coloured water on the clothes of persons passing in the street, as described in Ratnávali, pp. 5, 6, 7, where syringes and waterpipes are used by the crowd. Flowers, and especially the opening blossoms of the Mango, would naturally be much used for decoration at this festival, and as offerings to the god of Love. It was formerly held on the full moon of the month Chaitra, or about the beginning of April, but now on the full moon of Phálguna, or about the beginning of March. The other great Hindú festival, held in the autumn, about October, is called Durgotsava or Durgá-pújá, being in honour of the goddess Durgá.

<sup>2</sup> Pranidhāna, 'profound meditation,' or that mental faculty by which divine beings were supposed to be able to ascertain future events. The verb pranidhā is primarily 'to fix in;' hence 'to fix the mind on,' 'be intent on.' Compare in Vikram. [interlude before the 4th. Act] mayá pranidhāna-sthitayá atyádhitam upalabdham.

The Hindūs divide the year into six seasons of two months each, viz.—1. Spring, Vasanta, beginning about the middle of March, or according to some, February; 2. Summer, Grishma; 3. Rains, Varshāh; 4. Autumn, Śarad; 5. Winter, Hemanta; 6. Dews, Śīśira. Punakokila: see p. 162, note 3. Sanharati: compare p. 14, l. 1. After divasāni, Kātavema supplies gatāni, 'have passed.' This construction of the genitive case after gata expressing the lapse of time is not uncommon. Compare ashta panchāśatam rātryah śayānasya adya me gatah: Mahābh., xiii., 7732. Adya daśamo māsas tātasya uparatasya: Mudr., 80, 11. Māso jātasya: Pānini, II., 2, 5. Pāda-mūlam, lit., 'the root of the feet,' 'the heel.' is dense as a clod of earth.' Compare our expressions 'clod-pated,' 'clod-poll,' 'blockhead,' etc. Some of the MSS. have manda-buddhind. As to bhavitavyatā balavati, see p. 205, note 3.

<sup>1</sup> 'Have not hearts that give place to sorrow,' 'do not give themselves up to uncontrolled grief.' As to pātra, 'a receptacle:' see p. 202, note 4 at end. I have followed Kātavema's reading. That of the other Devanāgarī MSS., soa-vattavā, is hardly intelligible.

ratī: Ś. Muhus tishtha, etc.: see p. 212, l. 6. Guru-same, i.e., alaughyādēśatayā.

<sup>1</sup> 'Alas! such is (the force of) aversion to one's own action,' or 'such is the force of self-reproach for wrong committed by one's self.' Paratā may mean either 'addiction to,' or 'alienation from.' It seems here to have the latter sense. Some of the Bengālī MSS. have a-kajja-paratā. Śiva-kārya, i.e., 'relating to Śakuntalā': Ś. Compare p. 207, l. 1.

<sup>2</sup> 'Who else could presume [would have the power] to lay-a-finger-on [touch, bear off] the idol of (her) husband?' Kah anya: compare p. 208,
l. 4. Pati-devatā, 'the goddess of her husband,' or as we should say, 'a wife idolized by her husband.' This I take to be the sense of this expression, which is found in all the Devanāgarī MSS. The Bengālī have pati-vratām,
'a wife devoted to her husband.' Pari-mārṣtūm [so read all the Devanāgarī] must come from pari-mrij, to which Westergaard gives but one meaning, 'abstergere.' Doubtless, it may be used like pari-mris, 'to lay hands on,'
'lay hold of:' cf. p. 202, note 4. One MS. [E.I.H. 1060] has parā-marṣtūm.

Schol., Chézy. Janma-pratisṭhā = janani: Ś. Dushyanta speaks of Śakuntalā to the Vidūshaka as, 'thy friend.' So the Yaksha speaks of his wife to the Cloud, in Megha-dūta, verses 87, 93.

<sup>1</sup> 'Truly the state-of-mental-delusion [delirium, hallucination] is to be wondered at, not the recovery-from-it [the awakening from it].' According to Śāṅkara, sammoha is equivalent to 'forgetfulness,' and pratibodha to 'recollection.'

<sup>2</sup> This is either the causal form of the root prī, or a nominal verb from pāra, 'the other side;' meaning first 'to traverse,' 'get through,' 'bring to an end;' and secondly in Prākṛit and more modern Sanskrit, 'to be able.' In the latter sense, which is the one required here, it is much used in the Bengālī dialect. Compare in Greek, πέρα, πέρας, περάω, περάω.

<sup>3</sup> 'Was it a dream? or an illusion-of-magic? or a mental-delusion? or (the result of my) good-works so far indeed rewarded (and then) marred? It has certainly passed away, never to return: (and so has become) the steep precipice of my heart's-fondest-hopes.' Such is the reading of all the Devanāgarī MSS., and doubtless the true one. I have adopted eva and prapātāh [in place of eto and prapātāh] from the Mackenzie, the former supported by Kātavema. Māyā, i.e., indra-jāldi-kriyā: Ś. Bhrama: one so affected imagines that to be present which does not really exist [asad api sākshāt-karoti: Ś., Ch.] Puṇyam, i.e., śivakiyam sukṛitam: K. Tūvat phalam eva, i.e., darśana-phalam eva: K. darsana-mātra-phalam: Ch., 'fruitful so far only as the sight of Śakuntalā': K. Kṛiṣṭam [cf. p. 201, l. 7]: the best explanation of this idea will be found in p. 80, l. 6, with note 2, and in note 2 in this page. Asannivṛittiyai: compare Raghu-v., viii., 48, para-lokam asannivṛittaye gatāsi, 'thou art gone to the other world never to return.' Śankara thus explains the second half of the verse: 'As a man after ascending the peak of a mountain falls headlong, so my hopes after ascending to the sight of Śakuntalā are precipitated.' As to tata, see p. 175, note 1. Amara [ii., 3, 4] gives atata as a synonym of prapāta and bhṛigu, each of these words signifying 'a precipice' but there is no reason why atata should not be used as an epithet of prapāta, to denote a very precipitous declivity. The Bengālī MSS. read Kṛiptam nu tārat phalam eva puṇyaish asannivṛittau tad [asannivṛityaitad] atira manye manorathānām atata-prapātām.

However offensive to our notions of good taste, it is certain that in Hindú erotic poetry, perspiration is considered to be one of the signs of passionate love. Varniká [= varṇa] is the reading of Kátavema, supported by most of the Bengálí MSS., which have varṇaká. The other Devanágari have cartiká, which may possibly, like vartí, mean 'collyrium,' 'pigment.' Uchchhvasa, lit., 'breathing-time;' hence, 'cessation.' Kapola-patitam might be rendered 'fallen on the cheek,' [i.e., of the portrait] as well as 'from my cheek.'

It serves the god Brahmā as a vehicle, and hence the hansa-nāda or 'cry' of this bird has a sacred character, just as the cry of the swan, with the Greeks: the voice of a beautiful woman is even compared to it: Bhatti-kāvya, v. 18. Mālinī: compare p. 103, l. 4; p. 15, l. 6. Pādāh = pratyanta-parvatāh: Ś. = par-yanta-parvatāh: K. Gauri-guroh = Himālayasya: Ś. Himāla, the god of the great snowy range was the father of the goddess Gaurī, the wife of Śiva, whence she is called Pārvatī, Himavatsutā, Himajā, etc. Sākhā—etc.: compare p. 17, note 2* at end; p. 23, note 1.

<sup>2</sup> Chézy considers that abhipretam must here be taken in the sense of 'going before all others,' 'having the preference,' i.e., the favourite ornament. There seems to me no reason why this word should not retain its regular meaning, and the passage be translated, 'there is another of Śakuntalā's ornaments intended (to be drawn) on this picture (but) forgotten by me.'

1 'Wherefore dost thou undergo the fatigue of hovering round about? There [eshu] resting-on-a-flower the-devotedly-attached female-bee, although being thirsty, waits for thee; nor indeed without thee will she sip (its) nectar.' Paripatana, 'flying round about,' the first sense of pat is 'to fly.'

<sup>2</sup> 'For-once-now this (bee) is warned-off [kept off] quite in a courteous manner.' The meaning is somewhat obscure, but there seems to be a satirical allusion to the king's polite address to the bee, followed as it is by a threat.

drunk by me in love's banquets, (then) I will make thee imprisoned in the hollow of a lotus.' Compare verse 77, p. 128, note 2. Bimbádharām: 'lip like the bimba,' i.e., of a bright red colour, like the gourd of the Bimba or Momordica monodelpha, a cucurbitaceous plant. So Bimbádharālakṭakāḥ: Mālavik., p. 30, 1; Ragh., xiii., 16. Compare our expression, 'cherry-lip.' Kamalodara—etc.: see p. 183, note 1. Dandhana seems here to mean 'the place of imprisonment.'

<sup>1</sup> 'How should he not stand in awe of one who has (threatened him with) so severe a punishment?' Tikṣṇa-danda, 'severe in punishing,' 'a strict disciplinarian.' The Prākṛit equivalent of tikṣṇa is tiṅha, according to Vararuchi, iii., 33, although most of the MSS. have tikkhaṇa. The root bhi in Sanskrit is usually joined with an abl. case, but the gen. is admissible. Kātavema, however, observes that this construction is peculiar to Prākṛit. Compare dāksṇīya-pāśchāttāpasya bibhemi: Vikram., end of Act 2.

<sup>2</sup> 'Even I now did not understand the thing: how much less should he perceive that it was painted?' Anavagatārthā: so reads the Mackenzie MS., supported by Kātavema; the others, avagatārthā.

<sup>3</sup> 'Why has this ill-natured-act been perpetrated (by you)?' As to paurobhāgyam: see p. 211, note 2. Kātavema observes, purobhāgi = doshaka-darśi = dushtah, tasya karma paurobhāggam, and refers to Pānini, V., 1, 124.

As to viharati in the line following this verse: see p. 167, note 3.

<sup>2</sup> 'This demeanour of (one in a state of) separation, opposing first one thing and then another, is singular [unexampled, without a precedent].' Pūrvāpara-virodhī may mean 'setting itself against everything from first to last,' or 'from first to last untoward.' Lovers, when separated from each other, were supposed to find comfort and amusement in various trifling employments expressive of their passion [see Megha-dūta, verse 86]; but here was the case of one whom nothing could divert.

<sup>1</sup> 'A light being really (near at hand) this-man by reason [fault] of the screen (which covers it) experiences (all the) ill-effects of darkness.' Dr. Bochtlingk proposes to interpret andhāra-dosam by andhakāra-doshām, 'dark night,' or 'the darkness of night,' but this seems hardly a legitimate compound, nor does the sense require it.

<sup>2</sup> 'Longing for their portions of the sacrifice.' Janna is the Prākṛit equivalent for yajna by Var., iii., 44. Great sacrifices were performed by kings in celebration of auspicious events, especially after marriage, in the hope of securing issue, and Indra with the inferior gods were invited to partake of portions set apart for them. These sacrifices were accompanied by largesses to the Brāhmanas, and festivities, in which the gods were supposed to be eager to participate. Compare Rāmāyana I., xiii., 6, 8. The mother of Indra was Aditi, who was the wife of Kāśyapa [see page 22, note 1]. It appears from Act 7 of the present play that Śakuntalā was at this time enjoying an asylum with the illustrious pair Kāśyapa and Aditi in some sacred retreat, where they were engaged in acts of mortification and penance.

<sup>3</sup> 'Therefore it is proper to wait for this period.' This is the reading of Kāṭavema. Some of the Devanāgarī have tā na juttam kalam, etc., for tasmān na yuktam kalam, etc.

Sattva = bhūta, 'a goblin' or 'evil spirit.'

<sup>1</sup> Griha, 'a house,' or 'a wife,' is masc. in the plur.: Am.-ko., ii., 5
The Sāh.-Darp. [p. 190] inserts nāma, 'forsooth,' after mamāpi.

day by day cannot be altogether ascertained. Is there (then) the power to know in every case by what road each of my subjects is walking?' lit., 'by what road who among my subjects,' etc. Tūrat = sākalyena: K. Pramāda- skhalitam, 'tripping,' 'stumbling,' 'blundering,' from carelessness. Āśeshato = sākalyena: K. According to Kātavema, this last clause presents an example of kāku which is defined as 'a change in the tone of the voice,' 'giving emphasis.' Thus, 'Is there the power?' becomes equivalent to 'There certainly is not the power:' see Sāh.-darp., p. 24.

<sup>3</sup> Avidhā ityākrośe. The interjection avidhā is used in calling for assistance:
K. Translate, 'Help! help!' The word is not given in the Dictionary, nor is any mention of it made in the grammars. Two of the MSS. have aviha for avidhā; the Mackenzie, aviddho; my own avidū. Aviha and avidhā seem to be interchangeable. Avihā occurs in Mālavik., p. 12, l. 22; p. 24, l. 7;
p. 56, l. 8. Dr. Boehtlingk suggests that avida in Mṛich., 213, 6; 312, 9, may be for aviha or avidhā.

<sup>2</sup> 'Priding thyself on the power of rendering thyself invisible.' Tiraskarint is properly a veil to cover the head, used by celestial beings to render themselves invisible: compare p. 227, l. 8. It is here the science or art, peculiar to such beings, of so concealing themselves. This interpretation is supported by the gloss of Ranganātha on tiraskarant-prachchhannā in Act 2 of Vikr.; tiraskarant = antardhāna-vidyā. It answers to the śikhā-bandhan-vidyā, 'art of tying [covering] the top-knot,' called aparājita in a preceding page.

For the flamingo extracts [takes] the milk (and) leaves behind the water that is mixed with it.' The Hindūs imagine that the Hansa or flamingo [see page 250, note 2] has the power of separating milk from water. Compare Mahābh., Śakuntalopākhyāna, vii., 88, Prājnas tu jalpatām punśām śrutvā vāchah śubhāsūbhāh, Gunarad vākyam ādatte, hansah kshīram ivāmbhasah. Bhartri-hari [II. 15] has the following sentiment—‘Brahmā [whose vehicle is the flamingo] when very angry with this bird, can destroy his nest among the lotuses, but cannot deprive him of that celebrated and inestimable faculty which he possesses, of separating milk from water.’ The reference is probably to the milky juice of the water-lily, which would be its natural food, and to which allusion is often made by the Hindū poets. As to rakshati, see p. 85, note 1.

<sup>2</sup> Kūlanemi, son of the demon Hiranya-kaśipu, was a Daitya or Asura [see p. 86, note 1] with a hundred arms and as many heads. These Daityas were sometimes called Dānavas, from their mother Danu, who as well as Diti was one of the wives of Kaśyapa and daughters of Daksha. The Rākshasas, or cannibal demons who, for the sake of human flesh, waged perpetual war with men, as the Daityas did with the gods, were related to the Daityas.

<sup>3</sup> Nārada is a celebrated divine sage or Rishi, usually reckoned among the ten Prajāpatis or Brahmādikas first created by Brahmā, and called his sons. He acts as a kind of messenger of the gods: see the end of Act V. of the Vikramorvaśī.

My own MS. and the Mackenzie have jantuh for hi janah. Most of the Bengali MSS. read tejasot sankshobhat prayah pratipadyate tejah.

Wreaths and garlands of flowers were much used by the Hindus as marks of honorary distinction, as well as for ornaments on festive occasions, and to adorn sacrificial victims: compare page 222, line 1, note 1. They were suspended round the neck [see page 151, note 1], or placed on the head. Mandāra is one of the five ever-blooming trees of Swarga, or Indra's heaven. Another of these trees is said to be the Hari-chandana mentioned above, and another the Santāna; but the two most celebrated are the Pārijāta and the Kalpa-druma, or tree granting all desires. Jayanta is the son of Indra by his favourite wife Paulomī or Śachi.

That of Brahmá is called Brahma-loka, situated on the summit of Mount Meru; that of Vishnu, Vaikuntha, on the Himálayas; that of Siva and Kuvera, Kailása, also on the Himálayas; that of Indra, Swarga or Nandana. The latter, though properly on one of the points of Mount Meru, below Brahmá's paradise, is sometimes identified with the sphere of the sky or heaven in general. Uddhṛta, etc., lit., 'having the thorns of Dánavas extracted.' Kāntaka, 'a thorn,' is often used for a pestilent or noxious person or thing. Dánava: see p. 268, note 2. Nata-parvabhih = nimna-parvabhih; Natáni anunnatáni parvāni yesham: K. The condescension consisted in placing Dushyanta in front of the battle, just as the Sun places the Dawn in front of his chariot. Sahasra-kiraṇa is one of the innumerable names for the Sun. As to Aruṇa, 'the Dawn:' see page 142, note 3. Dhuri = rathāgre: Ś. :- agre, purobhāge: K.

The Hindús divide the heavens into seven Mārgas or Pathas, i.e., paths, courses, orbits (like the stories of the Mussalmán creed) assigning a particular vāyu or wind to each. Compare Vishṇu-Purāṇa, p. 212 [Wilson]. The first of these seven vāyu-mārgas or vāyu-pathas is identical with the bhuvā-loka, or atmospheric region, extending from the bhūr-loka, or terrestrial region [comprising the earth, and the adho-loka, called Pātāla] upwards to the sun. The wind assigned to this Mārga is called āraha, and its office is to bear along the atmosphere, clouds, meteors, lightning, etc. The other six make up the svar-loka or heavenly region with which Swarga is often identified [compare p. 273, note 1] in the following order:—The 2d. Mārga is that of the sun, and its wind, called pravaḥa or pravāha causes the sun to revolve; 3d. that of the moon, its wind samvāha or samvāha impels the moon; 4th. that of the nakshatra, or lunar constellations, its wind, udvāha, causes the revolution of these asterisms; 5th. that of the graha, or planets, its wind virāha bears along the seven planets; 6th. that of the saptarshi, or seven stars of the Great Bear, its wind parivāha bears along these luminaries, as well as the svar-gangā, or heavenly Ganges [saptarshi-chakram svar-gangāṁ shashthah parivāhas tathā: not as Dr. Boehtlingk suggests saptarshi-chakram svarga-gah, etc.]: it appears from the next verse that this was the Mārga in which Indra's car was at the moment moving; 7th. that of dhruva, or the polar-star, the pivot or axis of the whole planetary system, to which, according to the Vishṇu-Purāṇa [pp. 230, 240, Wilson], 'all the the celestial luminaries are bound by aerial cords, and are made to travel in their proper orbits, being kept in their places by their respective bands of air.' According to the Brahmānda-purāna, from which, as quoted by Kāṭya-vema, the above account is taken, the wind of the 7th Mārga, causing the revolution of the polar-star, is parārāha [? parārāha]. Obs. katara is sometimes used for katama. All the Devanāgarī MSS. read kataraśmin for katamaśmin.

<sup>1</sup> 'They call this road, freed-from-all-impurities-by-the-second-stride-of-Vishṇu, (the road) of that wind Parivaha, which bears along the triple-flowing-river [Ganges] located in heaven, and causes the stars [of the Great Bear] to revolve, duly-distributing-their-rays.' See the last note. Tri-srotas = swar-gangā = mandākinī: K. The Ganges was supposed to take its rise in the toe of Vishṇu [whence one of its names, Vishṇu-padī]; thence it flowed through the heavenly sphere, being borne along by the wind Parivaha and identified with the Mandākinī, or Milky way: its second course is through the earth; but the weight of its descent was borne by Śiva's head, whence after wandering among the tresses of his hair, it descended through a chasm in the Himālayas: its third course is through Pātāla, or the lower regions, the residence of the Daityas and Nāgas, and not to be confounded with Naraka, 'hell,' 'the place of punishment.' Gagana-pratishṭhām ākāśa-sthām: Ś., Ch.; Were it not for this interpretation I should translate 'the glory of the skies:' compare p. 260, l. 11. There is doubtless a double-entendre. Jyotiṣhi, etc., i.e., saptarshidām dhiṣṇyāni: K. Pravibhakta-rāsmih, i.e., asankīrṇa-rāsmayah tejāsi yasmin karmani tat tathoktam: K. Vartayati = sanchārayati: K. Dvitiya, etc., i.e., dwitīyena harer viśnor vikramena pāda-nyāseṇa nirdoṣam: K. Tasya vāyor, etc., i.e., tasya parivāhākhyasya vāyor mārgam panthānam imam grīhṇanti āmananti. Parivāho [sic] nāma swar-gangām saptarshi-maṇḍalam pravartayati śaśtho vāyu-skandho yathoktam brahmānda-purāne: K. The story of Vishṇu's second stride was this—An Asura or Daitya [see p. 86, note 1] named Bali or Mahābali, a descendant of Hiranya-kāśipu had, by his devotions, gained the dominion of Heaven, Earth, and Pātāla. Vishṇu undertook to trick him out of his power, and assuming the form of a Vāmana, or dwarf [his 5th avatār] he appeared before the giant, and begged, as a boon, as much land as he could pace in three steps. This was granted, and the god immediately expanded himself till he filled the world, deprived Bali at the first step, of earth; at the second, of heaven; but, in consideration of some merit, left Pātāla still under his rule. Another account makes him comprehend earth in his first step, the region of the air in his second, and heaven in his third. Hence tri-vikrama, tri-pāda, as names of Vishnu. The Bengālī MSS. have in place of tasya dwitīya, etc.; tasya vyapeta-rajasaḥ pravahasya rāyor mārgo dwitīya-hari-vikrama-pāta cchakī.

<sup>1</sup> 'Hence, indeed, do-I-feel-a-delightful-repose in all my senses [organs] external and internal,' lit., 'Hence my inner soul along with my external organs feels (a pleasurable) repose.' Compare in Vikram. end of Act IV., tead-darśanena prasanno me savāhyāntarātmā, i.e., 'body and soul,' 'my external and internal being,' 'my outer and inner man.' And again, Urvaś-gātra-sparśād iva nirvṛitam me sa-hṛdayam śarīram. The organs of sense [indriya] according to the Sāṅkhya system are divided into two classes, external, vāhyendriya; and internal, antarindriya. The external are of two kinds: the five 'organs of perception,' jñānendriya, viz., the ear, eye, skin, tongue, and nose; and the five 'organs of action,' karmendriya, viz., the throat, hand, foot, organ of excretion, and that of generation. The internal organs are three, viz., manas, 'the mind,' or organ of thought; buddhi, 'the reason,' or organ of apprehension; ahankāra, 'individuality,' or 'self-consciousness.' Chitta, 'the heart,' or organ of feeling is sometimes added. Amara [I., 4, 17] divides the indriya into two grand classes—1. karmendriyāṇi; and 2. buddhindriyāṇi or dhindriyāṇi, 'intellectual organs;' the latter comprises the jñānendriyāṇi with manas: this seems to be the popular division. Compare Vikram., Act iii., Bhavitaryatānurvīdhayāni buddhindriyāṇi.

In the same way to a voyager in a balloon at a very great height, the surface of the earth would seem flat, the trees would be compressed within their foliage like mushrooms, and the rivers shrivel into threads or tiny rivulets; but, on descending, the mountains would appear to stand out, and the earth to recede from them, the trees would exhibit their elevation, and the rivers their breadth of water. tanmajātām = udgachchhatām: K. Ararohati = adho-gachchhati: K. Paribhyantara, etc.: The Colebrooke MS. and my own have parṇa-svāntara; the Taylor, parṇeshvāntara; the Mackenzie, parṇa-prastara; Kāṭavema, parṇān-ara-rilnam. Skandhodayāt = kroḍāvirbhādt: K. Santānat = jala-vistādt: K. the other Devanāgarī have santānais. Tanubhāva, etc., Tanubhāvena ākṣmatveṇa adriṣṭam salilam yāsām: K. vyaktim bhajanti, i.e., vyaktā bhavanti: K.

An account of Kāśyapa, who, as son of Marichi, is called Mārīcha, is given in page 22, note 1, and p. 86, note 1. He is here said to be one of the Prajāpatis, or fathers of all created things, who were Brahmā's sons, created by him to supply the universe with inhabitants, and who, after fulfilling their mission, retired from the world to practise penance and prepare for death. The Vāyupurāṇa certainly reckons Kāśyapa, with his father-in-law Dakṣa and other sages, among the Prajāpatis, but he does not belong to the seven original Prajāpatis of whom his father Marichi is one, nor to the ten enumerated by Manu [I., 35]. Of the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa married to Kāśyapa, the eldest, and his favourite wife, was the Aditi introduced here, from whom were born the gods and particularly the twelve Ādityas, the several representatives of the sun in the twelve months of the year. From Diti, Danu, and others of the remaining twelve, came the Asuras or demons; and, from Vinatā, Aruṇa 'the Dawn,' [see p. 142, note 3] and Garuḍa, 'the vehicle of Viṣṇu and king of birds.' Śvādyambhuvāt = Brahma-sunoh: K. Surāsura-guruh: as to guruh, see p. 173, note 3, in middle, and p. 91, note 1, correcting the typographical error in the second line of the last note, 'venerable hermit' being a misprint for 'venerable parent.' Sa-patnikas, i.e., patnyā adityā saha: compare such compounds as sa-strīka, sa-śrīka, etc.

These hillocks sometimes rise, in Bengal, to the height of eight or ten feet, and are held sacred: see Manu, iv., 46, 238. Such was the immovable impassiveness of this ascetic, that the ants had thrown up their mound as high as his waist, without being disturbed, and the birds had built their nests in his hair. Sandashta, etc. = āślishta-nirmokena: compare p. 121, note 2. This thread or cord, sometimes called the sacrificial cord yajnopavīta, might be made of various substances, such as cotton, hempen or woollen thread, according to the class of the wearer, and was worn over the left shoulder and under the right. The rite of investiture with this thread, which conferred the title dvija 'twice-born,' and corresponded in some respects with the Christian rite of baptism, was performed on youths of three classes, at ages varying from eight to sixteen, from eleven to twenty-two, and from twelve to twenty-four, respectively: see Manu, ii., 36, etc. Latā-pratāna = latā-santāna, 'the spreading part of a creeper.' Jatā-mandala is the circle or bundle of matted entangled hair which ascetics allowed to grow on the crown of their heads, and which fell in long clotted tresses over the back and shoulders. Jatā is, especially, Śiva's hair so plaited and arranged, through which the Ganges meandered before its descent upon the earth. Nichitam = pūritam: K. Sthānūr = śākhā-hiṅśa taru-skandhak. Abhy-ark-śimbam = sūrya-maṇḍalābhimukham: K. Sir W. Jones observes that 'the vegetable world scarce exhibits a richer sight than an Aśoka-tree in full bloom. It is about as high as an ordinary cherry-tree.' The flowers are very large, and 'beautifully diversified with tints of orange-scarlet, of pale yellow, and of bright orange, which form a variety of shades according to the age of the blossom.'

<sup>3</sup> 'I expect not to (obtain my) desire; why, O arm, throbbeest thou (thus) vainly? For happiness formerly scorned turns to misery.' Kāṭavema observes that manorathāya is here equivalent to manoratham prāptum, and refers to Pāṇini's Sūtra ii., 3, 14. So phalebhyo yāti = phalāni dhartum yāti. As to the throbbing of the arm, and nimittam सूचयित्वा [= śakunam nirūpya: K.] see p. 20, notes 1 and 2. Śreyo = śubham, i.e., Śakuntalā-rūpam, 'consisting of Śakuntalā:' K. Hi parivartate: Kāṭavema has viparivartate and sat parivartate.

<sup>4</sup> 'Act not so wildly [do not commit such a wild, wilful act, be not so wild in your behaviour]. What! has he gone already to his own nature?' Compare Ragh., iii., 42. Prakṛiti, 'the state or character which is natural to one:' compare p. 72, note 2. Gatah: see p. 162, note 1 at end.

<sup>3</sup> Kāṭavema quotes a passage from the Vasanta-rājiya to show that different movements of the lips, such as biting the lip, pouting the under-lip, etc., were significant of various emotions. The gloss is corrupt, but it appears that adhara-darśana = adhara-prasāraṇa is [anādare] a gesture of contempt. Compare Psalm xxii., 7: 'All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip,' etc.

<sup>2</sup> ‘His hand stretched forth to beg for a coveted object, having the fingers connected by a web, appears like [shines like] a single lotus-blossom, the spaces between whose petals is imperceptible, expanded by the early dawn, whose-glow-is-just-kindled.’ Pranaya = prārthana: Ś. Jāla, etc.; Jāleshu antareshu grathitāḥ sanhatāḥ angulayo yasya: K. For grathitāngulih Śankara has sanhatāngulih = saṁśliṣṭāngulih, and remarks that a hand whose fingers were thus united was indicative of great valour [mahā-puruṣhatvam]. He adds jāla-pāda-bhujāriti nara-nārāyaṇa-viśeṣaṇam uktam, ‘webbed-feet and webbed-hands are said to be characteristics of Nara and Nārāyaṇa.’ Hindū poets reckon thirty-two marks of greatness, and he who possessed them all was said to be dvā-triṁśallakṣaṇopetah. The child’s fingers, being drawn together by this membrane or web, would bear some resemblance to an expanding lotus-flower, the fingers answering to the long petals, which would be only separated towards the top. This seems to be the sense: my first inclination was to translate, ‘having the fingers regularly marked with reticulated lines,’ or ‘having the fingers drawn together into (the form of) a bud.’ Alakshya [= adrīṣya: K.]: So read all the Devanāgarī MSS. excepting my own, which has alakshya, with the Bengālī; Śankara, however, has alakshya. Patrāntaram = dala-vivaram: K., Ś. Iddha-rāgayā navoṣhaś, etc.; Ushaś, ‘the dawn,’ is usually neuter in classical Sanskrit. In the Vedas, as here, it is feminine. Thus in Rig-veda i., 46, 1, Eṣho uśā apūrvyā vyuchchhati priyā divah. See also Rig-veda i., 48; 3, 5, 7, 8, 13, and i., 62, 8, and i, 92, 4, and i., 113, 4, etc. It is possible that the feminine noun ushā may form its vowel cases from ushas, as jard from jaras; nom. jard, jarasau, jarasah; instr., jarasā, jarābhyām, jarābhih, etc.: see Professor Wilson's Grammar, rule 129. The following is the corrupt gloss of Śāṅkara: ushah-pratyushasi kīvam pihaprasvāntu [?] pihprasvāntu: Ch.] yoshatīti koshah. Kāṭavema explains navoshasā as a Bahuvrīhi, 'by the early-dawned one:' Navam usho yasyāśā śā navoshā prāṭhasandhyā tayā bhinnam vikasitam. As to pankajam: see p. 212, note 3.

<sup>1</sup> This pleonastic word, according to Lassen [Instit. Prāk., p. 118] is derived from the Sanskrit kṛite, and is equivalent to pertinens ad, 'in the cottage belonging to me,' etc. Some of the MSS. omit the word.

<sup>2</sup> 'I have a great fancy for this unmanageable (child).' Durlalita, i.e., durlabham īpsitam yasya [S.], 'difficult to be coaxed or pleased,' 'wayward,' 'naughty.' Kāṭavema reads durlasitāya and interprets by dhūrtāya, 'roguish,' 'mischievous.' The causal sense of the root lal is 'to coax,' though dur-lālita might then be expected. The primitive idea is certainly that of 'sporting,' 'toying,' 'taking pleasure,' as in the root las. So in Vikramorvaśī, Act II., the king complains that his eye-sight has become durlalitam, i.e., 'difficult

The Scholiast there explains the word by dur-dgrastam. In the Sāhit.-darp., p. 193, line 1, the following is cited from the Mahābh.: Dhik dhik sūta kim kṛitān asi vatsasya me prakṛiti-durlalitasya, where durlalita is explained by durvilasita.

<sup>2</sup> 'O gentle sir,' lit., 'O thou with auspicious countenance.' According to the Sāhit.-darp. [p. 179, line 16] bhadra-mukha and saumya are the titles used by the inferior characters in addressing the king's son: saumya bhadra-mukhetyevam adhamaistu kumarakah. They do not seem to be so restricted, as in the 5th. Act the Bengālī MSS. make Gautamī address the king himself as bhadra-mukha; and Kātavama extends the application of both terms to Compare the parallel passages in the 5th Act of the Vikramorvaśi, and the following from the Mahābh.: *Putra-sparśāt sukhataṛaḥ sparśo loke na vidyate. (They) who first of all for the sake of protecting the earth choose a residence in palaces abounding-in-all-the-pleasures-of-sense, to them [of them] the roots of trees where the one religious vow of ascetics [i.e., control of the passions, mortification] is rigidly maintained, become a dwelling-place.' Rasādihikeshu: the Bengālī MSS. have sudhā-siteshu, 'white with stucco or chunam.' Uśanti [3d pers. pl. pres. of vaś] = ichchhanti: Ś. = vānchhanti: K. Taru-mūlāni: so Manu enjoins that the hermit is to be vijitendriyo dharāśayo vriksha-mūla-niketanah, 'his passions kept in subjection, sleeping on the bare ground, dwelling at the roots of trees:' vi., 26. It seems to have been a constant practice in ancient India for kings when they had reigned sufficiently long, to retire from the charge of government and betake themselves to penitential exercises. They first associated the Yuva-rāja or heir-apparent with themselves, and then left him in quiet possession of the throne.

Compare the next note. It was probably a kind of locket, containing some herb with talismanic properties, worn round the waist, to serve as an amulet. Karandāka certainly usually signifies 'a little box,' but it may possibly be the name for the herb itself. Kātavema explains it by rakshā-ghutikā [? gutikā], 'a magical ball.' Some of the Bengālī have rakshā-kāṇḍo; Śāṅkara and Chandra-ś., rakshā-gaṇḍo and rakshā-gaṇḍako.

As to the name aparājītā, compare p. 266, note 2. The jāta-karma is the fourth of the twelve Sanskāras, or purificatory rites, described in Manu [ii., 27, etc.], and the first after the child's birth: compare p. 258, note 2, p. 198, note 3. It was performed by giving the child honey and clarified butter out of a golden spoon, before separating the navel-string.

It seems that men's clothes, as well as women's, consisted of two pieces: compare in Bhaṭṭi, iii., 20, manorame rastre, which, in one commentary, is rendered by manoranam vastra-dvayam, and, in the other, by cheto-hāriṇī vāstre. Pari-dhūsare: as the preposition ā is employed diminutively, so the prepositions pari and sam give force and intensity, much as περί and σύν in Greek, and per and con in Latin. Pari is even more intensitive than sam: thus, samāpti, 'completion,' pari-samāpti, 'entire completion;' sampūrṇa, 'very full,' pari-pūrṇa, 'completely filled;' san-śuṣhka, 'dried up,' pari-śuṣhka, 'quite dried up;' āpāṇḍu, 'palish,' pari-pāṇḍu, 'very pale;' pari-śrānta, 'completely wearied, etc., etc.' Dhṛitāika-veṇi: see p. 297, note 2. notion of eclipses :—A certain demon, which had the tail of a dragon, was decapitated by Vishnu at the churning of the ocean ; but, as he had previously tasted of the amrit or nectar reproduced at that time, he was thereby rendered immortal, and his head and tail, retaining their separate existence, were transferred to the stellar sphere. The head was called Rāhu and became the cause of eclipses, by endeavouring, at various times, to swallow the sun and moon. Rohini : as to the love of the moon for Rohini, the fourth lunar constellation, see p. 113, note 2.

If the latter be retained, translate 'the skin of whose lips is pale red from the absence of colouring or paint.' There is no doubt that unpainted lips were a sign of mourning, but this is sufficiently implied in pātaloshṭha, and it is a question whether sanskāra can ever mean 'paint.' As Kāśyapa and Aditi were the grandchildren of Brahmā, they were only removed from him by Marīchi and Daksha, their parents and his children: see p. 280, note 1. Vishnu, as Nārāyana, or the supreme spirit, [purusha] moved over the waters before the creation of the world, and from his navel came the lotus from which Brahmā sprang. As Vishnu, or the Preserver, he became incarnate in various forms, and chose Kāśyapa and Aditi, from whom all human beings were descended, as his medium of incarnation or place of birth, especially in the Avatāra in which he was called 'Upendra,' (or Indrānuja, Indrāvaraja) 'Indra's younger brother' [according to some identified with Kṛishṇa], and in his Vāmana, or Dwarf-Avatāra: see p. 276, note 1. Purusha is properly 'that which sleeps or abides in the body' [purī śete]. The worshippers of Vishnu identify him with Nārāyana and with Brahma, and name him Mahā-purusha, Purushottama, i.e., 'the supreme spirit,' thus exalting him above Brahmā, the Creator. Kālidāsa seems by this verse to include himself among the Vaishnavas.

<sup>1</sup> 'First (came) the accomplishment of my desires; afterwards, the sight (of thee). Hence thy favour (towards me) has indeed been unprecedented.' Śāṅkara gives the following interpretation: Śakuntalā-prāpakam bhavad-darśanam bhaviṣyati iti eram mamābhipretam āsīt, tāvat prabhāvāt darśanapūrvam nirvyūḍham. Tathā cha naimittikānantaram nimittotpattir iti anugrahasyāpūrvaticam iti bhāvah: 'My desire was that the sight of thee might lead to my recovery of Śakuntalā. But (my meeting her) was arranged through (thy) divine power, before my presentation to thee. Thus after the effect was the appearance of the cause. The meaning is, that the favour (of my seeing thee and receiving thy blessing) did not precede (the attainment of my desire), and hence that the favour was unprecedented, as the accomplishment of my wishes ought naturally to have resulted from thy blessing.' There seems to be a double meaning in apūrvah.

<sup>2</sup> 'First appears the blossom, then the fruit; first the rising of clouds, afterwards the rain. This (is) the regular-course of cause and effect; but the success-of-my-wishes (came) before thy favour.' Naimittika, 'that which is connected with the nimitta or is dependant on it,' 'the effect.' Puras - prathanatas: Ś. Sampadah [nom. pl.] = abhiṣṭa-siddhiḥ: Ś. It is clearly meant to be synonymous with abhipreta-siddhiḥ in the previous clause.

<sup>3</sup> 'Thus (it is that) the creators of-all-beings perform favours.' Vidhātṛi must here be equivalent to Prajāpati: see p. 280, note 1.

Thus, as Kāṭavema observes, when Dushyanta first saw Śakuntalā, he repudiated her [see p. 199, l. 7, and p. 200, l. 9]; when she passed out of his presence, he began to relent and doubt [see the last verse of Act V., p. 215]; and, when he saw the ring, he was convinced she was his wife. Neti: see p. 140, note 2 in middle. Samaksha-rūpe, i.e., samaksha-vidyamāna-rūpe: Ch. Padāni - pada-chihndāni: Ch. Vikārah = searūpānyathā-bhārah: Ś. May not sansayah govern both lines? thus: 'As if there were a doubt that that is not an elephant, while he is marching along, his form obvious to the eye.'

chariot whose motion is not (made) unsteady by uneven-ground, he will subjugate the earth, consisting of seven islands. Here, from his forcible taming of the animals, he (is called) Sarva-damana; but (then) he will acquire the appellation Bharata, from his support of the world.' Rathena: see p. 8, line 1. Anutkhāta, etc. [anmōnnata-pradeśasyābhāvād anutkhātam: K.]: so reads the Mackenzie MS., supported by Kātavema; the others, anudghāta: compare p. 9, l. 4, note 3. Stimīta = anishkampa: K. Aprati-bandhārtha-durgamanena: Ś. 'By this epithet it is indicated that the chariot would have the power of going in the air' [tena vīśhanena rathasya ākāśa-gāmitvam śūchitam]: K. Sapta-dwīpām: according to the mythical geography of the Hindūs, the earth consisted of seven islands, or rather insular continents, surrounded by seven seas. That inhabited by men was called Jambudwīpa, and was in the centre, having in the middle of it the sacred mountain Meru or Sumeru, a kind of Mount Olympus, inhabited by the gods. About Jambu flowed the sea of salt-water [lavana], which extends to the second Dwīpa, called Plaksha, which is in its turn surrounded by a sea of sugar-cane-juice [ikshu]. And so with the five other Dwīpas, viz., Śālmali, Kuśa, Krauncha, Śāka, and Pushkara, which are severally surrounded by the seas of wine [sura], clarified butter [sarpis], curds [dadhi], milk [dugdha], and fresh-water [jala]: Vish.-pur., p. 166. Aprati-ratha = atulya-ratha = mahāratha: Ś: see p. 177, note 2 in middle. Iha = asmin āśrame: K. sattvānām = prāṇinām śinhādīnām: Ś. śarabha-sinhādīnām: K. Prasabha-damanāt = balātkāreṇa mardanāt. The name Bharata is derived from the root bhri [fero] 'to support.' Many Indian princes were so named, but the most celebrated was this son of Dushyanta and Śakuntalā, who so extended his empire that from him the whole of India was called Bharata-varsha or Bhārata-varsha; and whose descendants, the sons of Dhṛitarāshtra and Pāṇdu, by their quarrels, formed the subject of the great epic poem called Mahābhārata: see p. 14, note 2.

<sup>1</sup> 'We invoke all blessings on him for whom the prescribed-rites were performed by your holiness,' or 'we have high hopes and expectations of him,' etc. As to kṛita-samādhāra, see p. 198, note 2; and p. 198, note 3.
